NDP picks woman, the first for riding

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

The New Democratic Party made history this week by nominating the first woman candidate ever to run in a federal election in the riding of Victoria-Haliburton.

Cathy Vainio, a resident of Omeme, was unchallenged at Monday's nomination convention and will join incumbent PC Bill Scott, Liberal Bruce Glass and Archie Dobbins of the Party for the Commonwealth of Canada in the election race.

In her acceptance speech, Vainio said it was an exciting time to be an NDP candidate because recent polls indicate that the party, under the leadership of Ed Broadbent, are challenging the other two parties in a great number of ridings and Broadbent is the most popular of the three leaders.

"Canadians are responding to our solid party platform and, as a leader, Ed has great appeal to Canadians," Vainio said the NDP is interested in addressing long-term party concerns such as an equitable tax system, geared-to-income housing, balanced international trade, the national deficit, security for fixed income recipients, unemployment and regional disparity.

But more important, she said, are the pressing issues facing voters during the current election campaign. Free trade, the one election issue receiving the most attention during the campaign, is threatening the core of the Canadian nation, according to Vainio. She also targeted abortion and the devastation of the global environment through acid rain and ozone depletion as crucial topics that candidates must address.

Another Progressive Conservative majority government would be, what Vainio calls, "a worst case scenario," and would lead to the "erosion of Canadian sovereignty, the falling away of social services and the continued devastation of the environment by unchecked pollution." She said the proposed trade agreement with the United States would amount to the sell-out of our national resources and would create a second hand government because every government policy would have to be checked out with the Free Trade pact. "It's in our best interest to have an NDP government," she said.

The Conservative tax reform has done little to increase take home pay, said Vainio, and the NDP would ensure an equitable tax system were put in place.

Touching on local issues, Vainio said the riding needs strong

Local resident joins the race to win riding

A fourth candidate has emerged in the fight to represent the riding of Victoria-Haliburton in the upcoming federal election.

Haliburton resident Archie Dobbins, a member of the Party for the Commonwealth of Canada, has announced his intention to challenge Conservative Bill Scott's 23-year hold on the riding.

Dobbins describes the Commonwealth Party as part of an international movement. Lead by the American Lyndon LaRouche, the movement has members throughout the Western world and fields candidates whenever there is an election.

The aim of the Party for the Commonwealth of Canada is to address global issues that Dobbins accuses the other political parties in Canada of avoiding. The three issues that Dobbins has identified as crucial in this campaign are:

- the impending world food shortage,
- the lack of adequate funding for research and development in Canada and,
- the possibility of an NDP government removing Canada from the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO).

"Each of these could cause a catastrophe in Canada," says Dobbins. "We're just sick and tired of waiting for someone else to do something about them."

According to Dobbins, Canada's three main political parties are failing to address economic and political realities. He says to most people the truth "would seem like something out of a fairy tale or a spy novel. The government doesn't have the power it needs to run the country and the people who are really in control aren't operating in the best interests of Canada."

A reduction of the NATO forces in Europe will open the continent to Communist expansion, argues Dob-

Fearrey Dysart reeve again

by LEN PIZZEY

Murray Fearrey will be back for another three-year term as reeve of Dysart et al. Fearrey is unchallenged, and will be acclaimed to the position on November 14.

Earlier, Fearrey announced that he would not seek re-election to the post he has held for the past 14 years. He said he needed a break from the responsibilities, and more time to devote to his business. As well, he expressed the hope that if he stepped ped down, people who have not run for council in the past might get involved in municipal affairs.

Not unexpectedly, his decision was greeted with dismay in the community, and pressure from concerned citizens who wanted him to serve another term, quickly built.

One member of council even circulated a petition asking him to take the reeveship again, although Fearrey said that had no effect on his decision to stay in local politics.

Fearrey said that when he made the decision to retire, it appeared that five of the seven members of council would try to retain their seats, ensuring continuity of projects and plans already underway in the municipality. By the middle of last week however, when Fearrey announced he would run again, it was thought that as few as three councillors might stand for re-election, and there was concern that continuity might be lost.

Fearrey cited several projects that he believes demand ongoing knowledge at the council table. The proposed commercial sewer line to Kashgagwigamog resorts has grown from a $2-million proposal to close to $7-million, and as yet there is no end to the cost inflation in sight. Council hopes it can persuade provincial authorities to come up with a funding proposal the resorts can afford. If it fails, the line will not be built, and development at the resorts will be curtailed.

The organization of Haliburton County is another issue likely to figure prominently in council's next three year term.

Central phone system needed

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

The time has come for the county to look into establishing a county wide emergency phone system, Stanhope council decided last Wednesday after a prank call demonstrated how inefficient the present system is.

A week ago last Saturday, Ann Barker, one of the people who answers the phone for the Stanhope fire Department, received a call from a young man who said that the Lochlin General Store was burning down. You can usually tell if it's a prank call by the tone and urgency in the caller's voice, she says, but this time there were people in the background yelling "get moving, it's burning."

Barker told the caller that the store was not in Stanhope's jurisdiction and gave him the phone number for the Minden Fire Department. However, the store is just on the boundary line with Dysart and at one o'clock Sunday morning, the message was finally relayed to Dysart Fire Chief, Mike Stinson.

When Stinson, 13 other volunteer firefighters and four fire trucks arrived at the store, everything was peaceful and calm, not a flame to be seen. While their first reaction was relief, says Stinson, the men also felt frustrated "that people would waste our time." All local firefighters are volunteers. In a worst-case scenario, Stinson said, while they were answering the prank call, a fire could have started in Eagle Lake and they would be a further 10 miles away from it.

Barker, who is also a councillor on Stanhope council, says that prank call or not, what happened that night justifies the need for a central telephone answering service. At present, when someone calls the operator saying there's a fire, the operator does not know what department is responsible and the caller is simply hooked up with any local department.

Approximately 20 minutes lapsed from the time Baker first received the call and Dysart's men began responding, she said. If it had been a real fire, that time could mean a loss of life or property.

Council endorsed her suggestion that the county be pressured to investigate setting up a central dispatch centre, similar to the one of the ambulance service. The person answering the phone would know which department should be called to fight the fire.

As well, for not the first time, Stanhope's phone system was out of order for a day and despite calls to Bell saying that the fire phones were of first priority, no move was made to restore communications until the next day. A letter will be sent to the Sudbury office stating council's displeasure with this type of response.

The Rails' End Gallery was the recipient of many jokes on Friday night when the Canada World Youth participants gave a Thank You Haliburton presentation after their three-month stay. Here the participants pose for a picture while they act out a skit about the painting of the gallery. A task which they thought would take the whole group two days, ended up being finished by the two CWY volunteers at the gallery, and lasted far into the chilly season. Returning to Pakistan this week was just an excuse to see the end of paint-splattered clothes.

Haliburton hosts debate

Local resident will have the chance to see how the federal candidates in the riding of Victoria-Haliburton feel about a variety of issues at a debate being held on November 2.

The debate, co-sponsored by the Haliburton County Echo and the Minden Times, will be held in the Dysart Community Centre and will start at 7:30 p.m. Liberal Bruce Glass, NDP Cathy Vainio, and Archie Dobbins of the Party for the Commonwealth of Canada have accepted invitations to attend. PC Bill Scott has yet to respond.

In the Courts

by JAY KERR-WILSON

Criminal cases heard in Provincial Court in front of Judges J.D. Bark and Edmondson as presented by Crown Attorney R. Koehl and Defense Attorney T. Johnston on Oct. 12 and 14.

MISCHIEF

Peter John Austin was found guilty of mischief in connection to an incident at the Dominion Hotel in Minden on Oct. 27, 1987.

Hotel owner, Donald MacKinnon, testified that he was working the night of the incident when Austin and three friends entered the bar. MacKinnon said the four were arguing amongst themselves and because of their scruffy appearance he expected trouble from the moment they walked in. He testified that he watched Austin leave the lounge and take a swing at the cigarette machine as he passed by it, breaking the glass. MacKinnon said the machine has not worked correctly since the incident.

Constable Ken Wesley of the Minden detachment of the OPP testified that he was dispatched to the Dominion Hotel and when he arrived he found Austin standing outside. When the cruiser pulled up Wesley testified that Austin ran down an alley and hid behind the hotel. When Austin was finally apprehended Wesley, said he noticed the young man's hand was injured and it was his opinion that Austin was under the influence of alcohol.

Testifying in his own defense Austin said he had been drinking at the bar with friends but they had not been arguing. He said he had gone to the machine to buy cigarettes, put in four dollars in quarters, and when the machine did not give him his cigarettes he hit it in the hope of either retrieving his money or the goods. He said he left the bar after the glass broke because he wished to avoid trouble. When the police showed up Austin said he ran down the alley because he was under a court order not to be in a licensed establishment.

In his submission to the court Johnston argued that Austin was not trying to damage the machine, only get what he paid for.

Judge Bark quickly arrived at the verdict of guilty. He said he found no difficulty in finding Austin guilty because anyone who hits a window should accept the fact that it could break. He said Austin's departure from the hotel after the incident indicated a guilty mental attitude. In passing sentence Judge Bark considered Austin's lengthy criminal record and said, "It appears as if you are serving life in jail on the installment plan." He told Austin "we can keep putting you in jail if necessary but what a useless way to live." He sentenced Austin to 60 days in jail for the mischief charge and a further 60 days for failure to appear, a charge to which Austin pleaded guilty.

IMPAIRED

Donald W. Thompson successfully defended himself against a charge of care and control of a motor vehicle while impaired by alcohol.

OPP Constable Brian Sachs testified that on Apr. 15 he was driving on County Road One when he came across a red pick-up on the side of the road with the front wheels on the paved portion of the southbound lane. He said there was another smaller blue pick-up parked behind the red one. He spoke to the person seated in the driver's seat of the red pick-up and identified him as Thompson. He said there was an odour of alcoholic beverage on Thompson, that his speech was slurred and that he swayed back and forth while standing. While Sachs was questioning Thompson another driver pulled up and the three men attempted to boost the red truck which was experiencing mechanical difficulties. When a second police cruiser arrived at the scene Sachs said he took Thompson to have a breathalyzer test. Sachs said he had to take Thompson to the Cobocok detachment because the breathalyzer equipment in Minden was malfunctioning.

OPP Constable David MacMartin was the technician who administered the test and he testified that Thompson's blood alcohol was at .205 per cent, more than twice the legal limit.

Thompson testified that he and a neighbour had gone to pick up the blue pick-up, which had been junked, and were towing it along County Road One when one of the front wheels seized. He said the red pick-up stalled when they were trying to back the blue pick-up off the road. Thompson sent his neighbour to get help and stayed in the red pick-up to turn on the four-way flashers whenever traffic approached. He said he had bought a bottle of vodka earlier in the day and when no help came for several hours he decided to have a couple of drinks to keep warm. He said he had no intention of driving and in any case both trucks were totally incapacitated.

In finding Thompson not guilty Judge Edmondson said the accused seemed to be an honest man and he accepted Thompson's statement that he had no intention of driving after drinking.

A little cheveux ruffling

Nada Vaughan's cheveux was given a few tugs during one of the Quebecois songs presented at the Canada World youth farewell on Friday night. While this might have caused Mrs. Vaughan to squint her eyes, everyone else enjoyed her discomfort. Most of the audience had been involved in CWY as host families or employers.

Stanhope election a race for councillors and trustee

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

Stanhope voters will only have to answer three questions on November 14: what councillors they want to represent them; who will be their trustee on the school board; and whether they want more French services provided in the township. The positions of reeve and deputy reeve will be held by incumbent Harry Davis and councillor Ann Barker respectively, after no one decided to challenge them.

ELECTION '88

By Monday evening, the deadline for filing nomination papers, there was just one more council candidate than there were positions to fill on the five-person council. Four people, all of them new to council, will be competing for the three councillor's seats—Murray Daniels, Fred Gardner, Eleanor Harrison and Barbara Nangle. As profiled earlier, Reeve Harry Davis decided to run for one last term when it became apparent that no one wanted to fill his place. Deputy-reeve Elvin Johnson and councillor Jim Harrison have decided not to put their name in again. This week The Echo talks with the people who will make up the next council, as well as the two men who are vying for the one trustee position on the Board of Education, incumbent LeRoy Eager and Curtis Eastmure.

Ann Barker says it's time to move on

After spending two terms on council as a councillor, Ann Barker has decided to represent the township as deputy reeve.

"I should be ready to start moving up," she says, and learning the ropes on county council as a deputy reeve is a good way to start. The past five years as councillor have given her an understanding of how things operate and she would like to put her experience to work for the county as well.

"Most people who run for council feel they can do something for the community," she says, and she is willing to spend more time fighting for the things which are important in both the township and the county.

Each one of us is responsible to be more aware of recycling, she says. "What we throw out is just crazy" and the dumps are filling at a fast rate because of it. When she had a garden, she composted her wet garbage and will resume this practice again and give the nutritious plants at least—soil to neighbours with gardens.

"I'm all for recycling" and is in favour of setting up bins at the dump, as well as getting young children involved with the program.

Another big issue is development. "I want to see development in the county. Each township has its own priorities but they've got to work together." Not only must townships cooperate, but all residents in the county, whether they live here part time or seasonally. The time has gone when any differentiation is made between "locals and cottagers". "All these people want the same thing," and that's a natural environment they can enjoy.

She is not in favour of time-sharing condominiums or cottages. (People "buy" a unit for a couple of weeks a year, meaning that ownership can change at least 26 times a year.) "What kind of tenants are they? If I have something I want to own it." People who only use a property for a few weeks of the year won't have the same loyalty to the area—or their neighbour's concerns.

This doesn't mean that all condominium ideas are bad—"they can be run really well." The trend she sees is to more expensive lakeside homes. She points to the Head Lake homes which can only be one-storey high so as not to block the view of people living on the tier after the lakeside homes. Another good development is PineStone Inn, she says. The property used to be a swamp and the inn is very attractive because it has kept in the image of the countryside—"rural and rugged looking". At the same time, however, "I don't want to see our marshland gone" and she would not be in favour of filling in vital swamps.

"Each township has to be its own guardian," she says. In the only major dispute involving the past council, she says that Dr. Offen had the right to build a trailer park on his property on Hall's Lake but the resulting dispute was good in the way it opened communications between the other residents and council. Later, when plans were made to create a Beau Valley Resort, council was very open to people about what was going on, she says.

"Muskoka is so built up this area has got to grow," but with that growth there has to be restraint. "What we have here is a great balance" between the environment and development. "We don't have to lose that."

People are more aware of how their actions affect the environment, she says, and when you see people building new homes today, you notice that most of them are very careful not to raze every tree in the area. "We need those trees and we lose if we cut every tree down."

There can be room for industry in the area as well, as long as it is an industry which suits the environment, she says. "We've got to keep our young people here," and at present, there are just not enough opportunities for them.

The next council will be asked to make some important decisions, but one voice is not enough to make a big difference. "You have one vote and you hope the vote you do give is the right one. Not everyone is going to agree with you."

Nangle will put experience to work

If there's a committee in Stanhope township, chances are that Barbara Nangle has taken part in it, says the fourth councillor candidate in the next election. But now, after 15 years of being involved on the committee level, she would like to share in the future planning for the area.

"There seemed to be a job to be done and I thought I could do it," she says. "I certainly feel I've had experience working as a team."

Not only has she been involved in township committees, but Nangle has also been an adult Guide leader and is "strongly involved" in her church, sitting on many committees dealing with long-range planning. "And I've done all of this while getting my degree," she says. For the past decade she has been taking correspondence courses for her Bachelor of Arts degree in English, and finally reached her goal this summer.

Content with the way the previous councils have operated, she believes that "we have to be aware of what's happening around us. We have to be aware of what's going on and look towards the future."

Each proposal which comes to council will have to be taken on its own merits, and while people should be encouraged to develop the area, council also needs to know what repercussions these developments will have.

Asked whether the fire department will get more attention than the other departments because her husband is fire chief and Ann Barker's husband is deputy fire chief, Nangle says "I'm not there for any particular interest group. I would treat each person and each group fairly."

Barbara Nangle

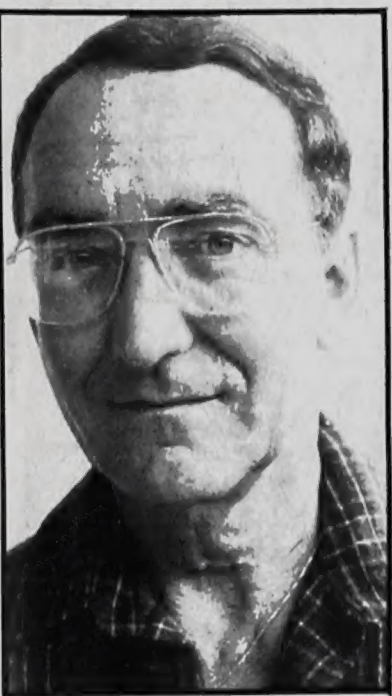

An all-candidates debate is scheduled for Saturday, October 28 at the Stanhope Firefighters Hall beginning at 8 p.m.

Gardner interested in development ideas

Because his family has had a cottage on Halls Lake for the past 42 years, and he's been living in it permanently since his retirement two years ago, Fred Gardner says "I'm interested in the area and I want to protect it."

"This area is going to grow and we've got to make sure our policies are set to see it grow in the way we want to."

The candidate for councillor says he would like to look further into the provincial program to open up more crown lands, an experiment which has already begun near Whitney. "Is there a way within the township for opening crown land for cottages?"

Fred Gardner

A minimum shoreline frontage of 300 feet could be established to limit development and this could take the pressure off the other lakes.

Asked whether this wouldn't bother people who buy land specifically because there is undeveloped crown land nearby, Gardner says that development pressure is going to happen anyway. "If cottages can't be built on crown land, then they'll be squeezed into someplace else."

On the condominium and time-sharing issue, Gardner, who is now a real estate agent with a Minden firm, says "I feel this area is going to grow and you can't be against it because you don't like the name."

He remembers how many years ago, the big issue was a boat with a 25 horse power motor, which residents felt would be detrimental to the lake lifestyle. "There will always be issues and people talking about them but if you have a responsible group of people trying to find the reasonable way" to solve them, any problems can be resolved. You always have to follow the golden rule, he says: Do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

Gardner was a member of the Halls Lake Concerned Citizens group which objected to a trailer park proposal. The debate which followed was a good way for everyone to express their feelings and helped the different bodies make their decisions. That sort of communication helps councils "find a right way through the maze."

Councils have to be more vocal when dealing with higher levels of government, especially over the water levels issue, he says. "Certainly it seems like we've been doing an awful lot of banging our heads against the wall, but we've got to keep at it. It's the squeaky wheel that does get the grease and I think we should be the squeaky wheel."

Ever since he retired, Gardner has been attending all the monthly council meetings. "I enjoy finding out what's going on" and was "very happy with the way council has kept control of expenses."

If elected, he would bring to council the experience garnered by working 29 years with Garland Commercial Ranges Ltd. Before retirement, when the company had revenues of $42-million a year, he was vice-president of finance and a director of the board, as well as being a director of sister companies in Pennsylvania, Louisiana and London, England.

It was during this career that Gardner says he learned how to ask "Where do you want to be and what steps do you take to get you there." Then you get the people who work with you to help you reach that goal.

Other experience includes being on the Hawk/Halls Lakes Cottagers Association executive for 15 years, recently stepping down from his position as president.

Harrison has development concerns

While Jim Harrison's name won't be on the roster for the next council, one candidate for councillor hopes to keep the Harrison tradition part of municipal politics—his wife Eleanor.

This year, Jim Harrison, who is at present a councillor and has been reeve, decided that he simply didn't have the time to devote to council. But Eleanor found that the opposite was true: with her two daughters now grown and living away from home, she feels she's now able to give more of her time and ideas to the township she's called home for the past 23 years.

Certainly Harrison has picked up what is involved in running a township by osmosis from her husband. However, as far as dealing with specific aspects of management is concerned, "I realize I'm going to have to read up on a lot of these things. But if you're willing to learn, I'm sure there's lots to learn."

One of her main concerns is the environment. "A stand has to be taken and something has to be done" in order to preserve what we have now and to make sure the detriment-

Why vote?

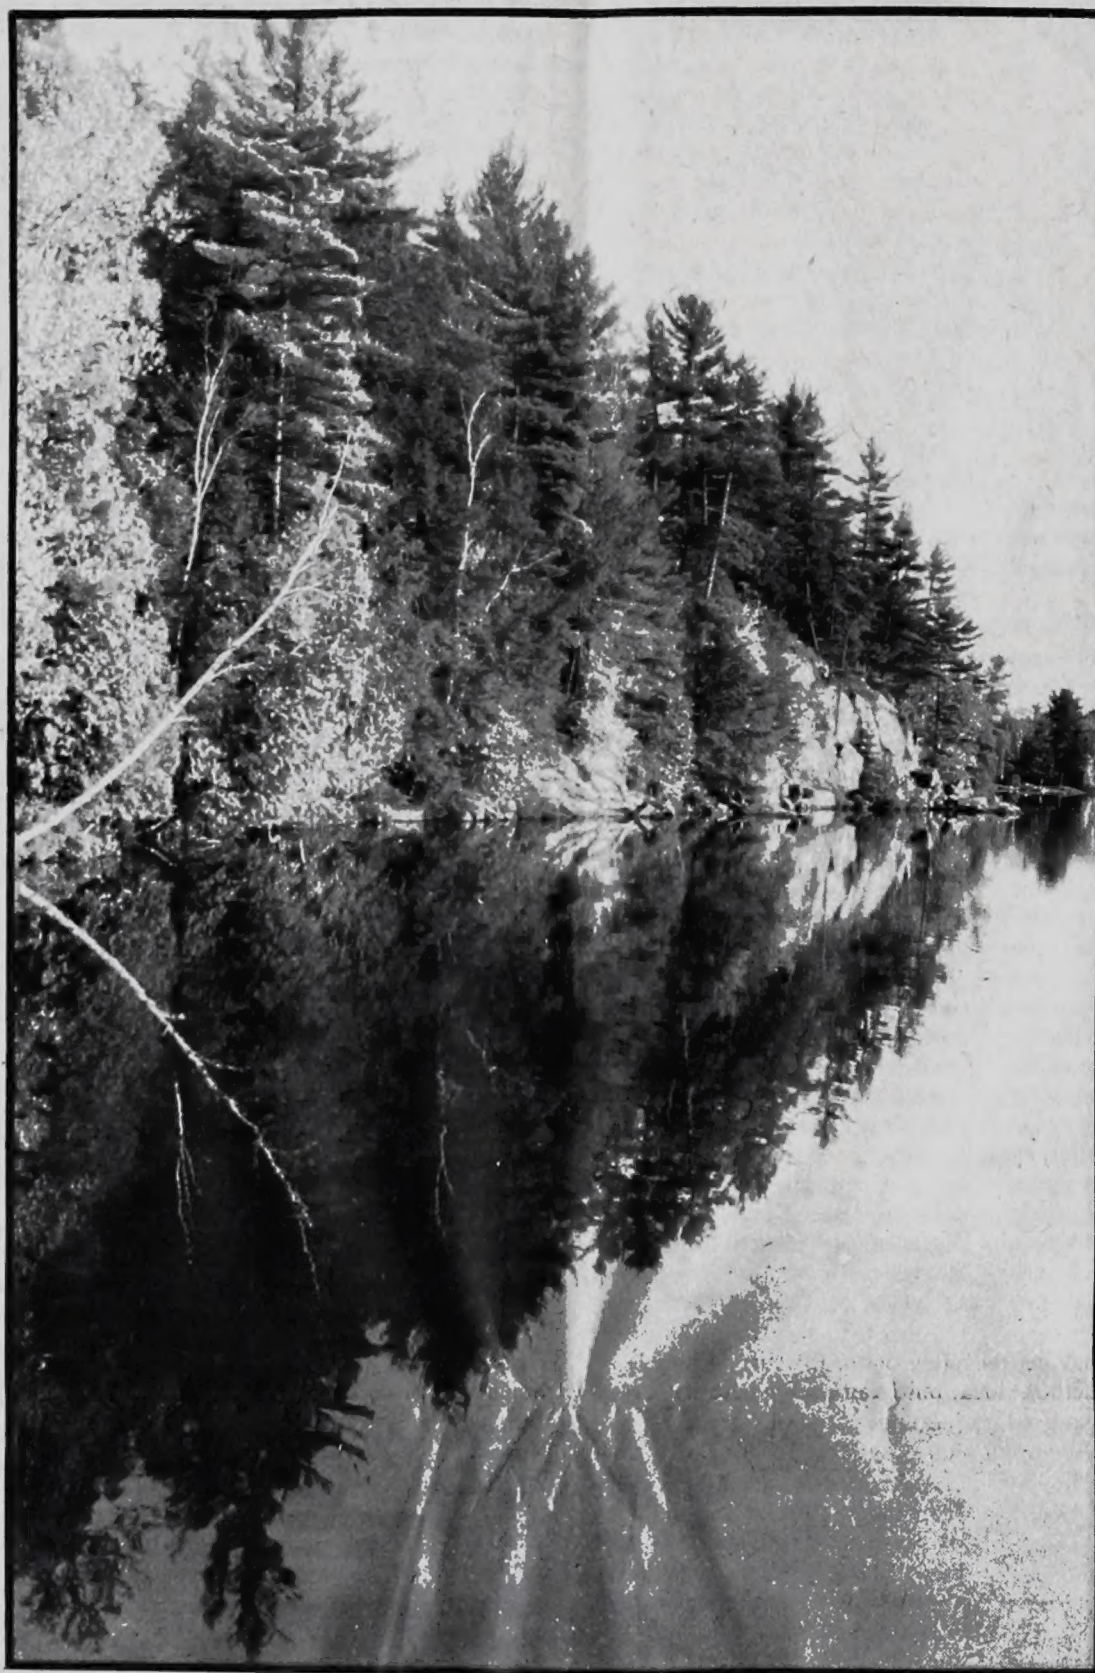

Even if you pride yourself as one of those unusual Canadians who understands the philosophy of the political party you vote for, and who believes there is at least an underpinning of truth beneath the platform of promises on which political campaigns are staged, it's hard not to be just a little cynical about the whole exercise of a federal election. There is, after all, very little difference among the parties when you strip away the heated rhetoric and sanctimonious posturing. All three major political parties are left of centre on matters of social policy. None, as yet, is willing to reduce social spending, or direct dollars only to the people who need it most. Each claims to be concerned about the environment, and each has come up with solutions that simplify and trivialize an overwhelmingly complex problem. On free trade, an issue which very few Canadians understand, according to recent polls, the policies are a little clearer, though no less likely to change in the face of realities that are understood by the politicians but conveniently set aside for the duration of the campaign. The NDP abhors the competitive marketplace, of course, and sees little of merit in the deal. The Liberals say they would tear up the agreement, though no serious-minded Canadian believes for a moment they could or should. Leader John Turner would sound more credible if he said he'd try to improve it in a few key areas, since that is all he could hope to accomplish if he were unseated the Tories in this election. For their part, the Tories are holding firm to their position that the deal is a good one for Canada. The majority of business people who understand the ramifications of freer trade, support that view.

Throughout the campaign, staggering amounts of tax dollars are committed to hastily conceived programmes whose principal object is not to make Canada a better place but to pander to special interests and buy votes. It's all rather insulting, because it tells only part of the story. Conveniently left out are the tax implications of all this generosity. A billion here and a billion there are as nothing to a campaigning politician, if he or she is confident the voter won't ask where that money ultimately and endlessly will come from. The average resident of Ontario already works from January until well into June just to pay the costs of being so extravagantly and wastefully governed. Yet questions of fiscal responsibility are never asked when politicians dole out their promises at whistle stops along the campaign trail. It's as if the money they spend is not ours but someone else's.

Fortunately there is at least one political arena where power is sought and gained not on the basis of rhetoric and posturing but on merit and ideas. That forum is in the local communities where we live and work, in the municipalities of Haliburton County. There is no justification for cynicism about municipal politics. Here, as perhaps nowhere else in the realm of politics these days, truth and common sense are the tests by which candidates are, or ought to be, judged. Here, too, the politicians are not bound by any philosophy other than their own experience and wisdom. A federal politician must toe the party line, and unless an MP is a cabinet minister, his or her voice is a mere whisper among the cacophony of competing interest in the caucus. At the local council table, however, councillors can speak their minds and be heard, and the merit of their ideas and opinions can be judged within the context of local needs and priorities.

Local politicians have a major role to play in the future of local communities. Their powers may be limited, but the matters under their control are significant nonetheless. A strong council, with intelligent, fair-minded and broadly experienced members, can steer a municipality around the hurdles and pitfalls that lurk at almost every turn. An effective council, working in a cooperative spirit with local citizens, cottagers, developers and other business people, can ensure the orderly growth of the community, and find a middle ground between those who abhor change and those who would pave the wilderness for a parking lot.

In short, local politics are based not on costly promises but on responsible action. It's hard to be cynical about that.

CHANGE is a welcome addition

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Our readers write...

To the Editor:

Thank you, members of C.H.A.N.G.E. for a truly educational and inspiring evening on October 7. Your presence and commitment to doing something positive for our environment is a long overdue, welcome addition to this community.

This meeting assured me that the public is ready, willing and concerned with the inability to participate in recycling here, because of a lack of local political back-up.

My votes in the upcoming municipal, regional and national elections are for those candidates whose actions speak louder than words. Who are they?

Yours sincerely,
Cathy Senitt, Carnarvon.

Refreshing CHANGE

To the Editor:

I applaud the efforts and energy of the members of our local public conscience, CHANGE. After attending its recent waste recycling discussion in Haliburton, I feel refreshed and quite optimistic, knowing so many people share the same opinion, that the practice of recycling and reusing are not only necessary but have always made perfect sense. My personal commitment is to continue to try and do something about the ecological mess we're creating, so my grandchildren may appreciate the many wonders that nature still provides.

We can't merely be content to "let George do it" and must realize the work that needs to be done in order to feel responsible for our actions must start right here and now. I'm going to ensure that anyone I vote for in the next election does more than pay lip service to environmental issues. They need to demonstrate some solid involvement by putting in collection bins, establishing and enforcing strong penalties for individual and corporate polluters and offering some incentives to encourage county-wide participation in the clean-up process. There's much truth in the saying "If you're not part of the solution, you're part of the problem." It's time to show, not just tell our kids about it. After all, they're inheriting this legacy from us, so let's leave them something worth enjoying.

A liberal viewpoint

To the Editor:

I found a back issue of your paper on a visit to an old friend, the one where it was suggested Peterson was Ontario's worst premier.

You are either young or ignorant of this provincial history. The old Henry administration was corrupt. So was the following one under Hepburn. Davis may have made the prize mistake of all time with the separate school mess. Roberts was the prime mover in listening to Hall and Dennis. That led me to one high school principal deploring the fact that a Grade 12 certificate was so cheap it signified only that the holder had been exposed to four years of secondary school classes.

I'm no champion of Peterson and neither he nor a follower will get my vote, but to be fair he's just one more politician with little guts or wisdom.

You'd be surprised too, at some of the deals that smooth operator Leslie Frost pulled and got away with.

A plague on all their houses.

Gun rules questioned

To the Editor:

Seeing that we are getting deeper into hunting season and more people are seriously thinking about guns, I thought this letter might catch the attention of those who are gun owners.

I've become convinced that our hard earned dollars are confiscated (it's called taxes), to pay some stupid bureaucrats to think up ways to frustrate and bully honest, hard working people. You see I've been gathering information regarding gun owner-

Dealing with anger a burdensome job

AS OTHERS SEE IT

Bob Giuliano

I GUESS THE TRUTH is that I am in a season of fury. Angry, plain angry. I hate being angry all the time. I hate having to wrestle with the demons of rage and to submerge them in order to care for people, do my work and teach my classes. Yet one cannot be enraged all the time. You can't dump your furor on kind souls for whom this may be a season of joy.

I'm not a hateful person, though folks always accused me of being 'an angry young man'. I'm no longer young so the title doesn't fit. I figured that avoiding people things like that was just a way of avoiding what they had to say. I was not and am not an angry young man, but I did and do feel deeply and passionately about things. So when I roar folks duck who like to keep peace at any price and for whom such outbursts are not acceptable. My life has been spent watching people back away from me when I only wanted them to roar as passionately in return, to meet in their strength. They just cut me off and left me alone.

Now I'm fearful of being a bitter, lonely old man. Everyone else seems calculated and cool. Like controlled icy astronauts. More and more folks move through life applying technical and effective 'life-skills'. I roar, blubber and have to apologize and ask for reconciliation.

The worst temptation for me is simply to withdraw, do my work and look forward to my retirement

In this season of fury it's not so much what is happening day by day in church and schools and industry, but the accumulation of frustration and discouragement that begins to surface, sometimes unexpectedly. Years of losing one battle after another accumulate in a ball of fire in my gut. It wants to flame out in a rage that cries, "I tried to tell you what would happen". That's the worst part of being older, I guess. You knew all along what could come of the modern experiment and you keep wanting to tell folks that you told them so!

Take for example the centralizing craze in organization that swept the country 20 years ago. It took the responsibility for life out of the hands of local folks and put it in structures removed from the (trendy words) 'grass roots'. Some of us saw that that would happen. In the church we even deployed prophetic tactics to convince the powers-that-be to let local communities stay in charge of their life. We nominated a candidate for President of the Conference on the platform that he would dissolve regional government and return the authority and responsibility for governing back to the Presbyteries and to the local congregations. In other words, put himself out of work. No one listened. Everyone was too desirous of keeping up with the modern movement toward uniformity in a mass age.

I could name a whole lot more of "I told you so's". That's not the point. I wasn't always right, but there were a lot of things that were obviously destructive to human life and now as we reap the consequences and folks start to accuse, I want to scream, "You had it your way. You got what you wanted."

The worst temptation for me as I live with this constant mad on, is to simply withdraw, do my work and look forward to retirement. Only 11 years to go, let the world go to hell in a basket and hang on until I get the pension. I'm too old to change anything now. No one listens anyway.

I admire those men and women who keep at it, keep charging full speed ahead in spite of the constant furor and rage that they live with. I envy those who know and understand and forgive the price they have had to pay and are able to love and listen and still help out. I work hard to imitate them, to keep the faith and to encourage the young. It takes tough discipline and regular prayer to sigh away the sorrow one feels for fools and get into the fray with true fervor.

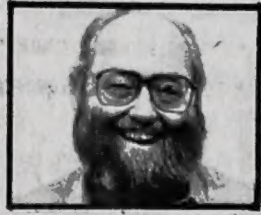

"Daddy King", the father of Martin Luther King, Jr. kept telling his people, "Don't let anyone make you hate. To hate is to die." It's a good lesson, good to remember. Hatred is death. Pure and simple loss of life. So the anger can't turn to hate and bitterness. It must stay alive as anger and find passionate expression for the love of life and freedom.

I AM SORRY we didn't arrive back from our recent trip in time to be able to attend the recent recycling meeting at the high school. Regular readers will know that the litter problem has been one of my reoccurring themes over the past three years.

I'm not sure that the recent attention recycling has had in the major media isn't directly related to the fact that Metro Toronto is having trouble finding a way to unload its garbage on its neighbors. There are similar struggles going on in the U.S.

But those of us who have been hammering away at this theme over the years are pleased to have the big city bandwagon jumpers on our side. The more the merrier, and the more likely something will be accomplished...

Last week's story about the meeting said that an environmental column will be starting in The Echo soon, and this means that it makes sense for me to leave one of my pet topics to the experts.

At the same time, having invested part of my recent trip in the subject, I still have a few thoughts to pass along. And before I left, I had talked to some people about the problems with plastic-based litter, and I may wish to pass along some of their ideas before I abandon the field...

About three years ago, I lamented the fact here that the coalition Ontario government of the day, (the usually ecology-minded NDP notwithstanding), implemented legislation letting the pop companies off the hook on long-standing Provincial regulations controlling the share of returnable containers they were required to get back.

Last year, just before the August elections, I called attention to the curious fact that, while the pop companies had been facing a string of charges for not meeting the new, easier quotas on refillables in 1987 — both Coca-Cola and Schweppes each faced 30 counts — the court cases were mysteriously delayed until after the elections.

This August, I questioned the Ontario government's lack of interest in our litter problems, compared to Michigan where I had just visited and found a 10-cent deposit on all cans. Soon after, I was handed a copy of a story on the subject in Harrowsmith — the magazine for city folk who think they'd like to live in the country some day.

A spokesman for the OMMRI (Ontario Multi-Material Recycling Incorporated) praised the current government for its support of recycling efforts, comparing them unfavorably with the previous Conservative government back in the 1970s.

For some reason or other, recycling containers by refilling them didn't seem to hack it with this guy. It was a bit of a mystery, until the story on the charges against the pop companies resurfaced the next day. It seems that the spokesperson who was lauding the 'new' system actually works for the outfit that has been pushing the 'blue boxes' — a system that has been one-third funded by the pop companies!

Now those of us who have been paying attention know that the pop companies and the supermarkets really were upset with the previous Government who were making them rehandle (recycle?) reusable bottles — at what ever cost was necessary — and cut down on the throwaways.

Frankly, as a former PR man, I would say that the pop interests have won the battle, and they are getting things their way. They'd much rather fund a general drive — and probably get a tax refund on the money they spend — than handle the mess they have helped create.

They just didn't want the former system to work, and may have found some way to influence the current government to soften its rules to meet their objectives. I hope their only contributions were to the 'blue box' recycling campaign...

On my trip to the U.S. earlier this month I learned that the states of Vermont, Connecticut, New York, Maine, and Massachusetts have worked together to extract a 5-cent refund from the pop companies and the breweries — one you can collect in any of these states, regardless of where you bought the product.

Sounds great on the surface, but I gather they aren't getting much cooperation there, either. Supermarkets take pop bottles — but only the brands they sell. You get a slip and have to line up at the till to get your money back, it's almost as though they didn't want the system to work there, either...

Last week's Echo also had a letter from a volunteer who tried to cleanup the sides of the roads in his area. He proposes a number of ideas to help solve the littering problem, including township fines.

Last April there was a story about the province's environmental investigations branch, whose 43 full-time investigators managed to give out 300 tickets to violators of all kinds of pollution laws in 1986. (That's about 6.9 tickets each, a little better than one every second month).

We may get recycling out of the current hoopla and 'blue box' idea, but I can't see where it'll do a thing to get littering under control.

I think the pop companies got the deal of the century.

Pic of the Past

This is the Golden Slipper at Haliburton, the famous dance pavilion, and this is how it looked in 1943. This was the era when dancing was all the craze, and night after night, people would flock to the Slipper to dance to the music of its owner, Al Perrin, and his Rhythm Swing Aces. At the height of The Golden Slipper's popularity crowds of more than 600 people would jam into the hall seven nights a week. Many local fellows met their sweethearts here and later married them. When Al Perrin was out with his car and loud speaker announcing upcoming dances at the Slipper he would always use the slogan "Where friends meet friends". The famous dance pavilion is long gone but the memories still linger on in the hearts of those who danced the night away at the Golden Slipper.

Fighting the siege mentality

A WAVE OF NEGATIVITY crashed over the heads of some unsuspecting tourists last week, shrouding a high school class in a spray of diatribes, each intended to sting like salt water against an open wound: Tourists, tourists, tourists. Everything has to be for the tourists. Nobody cares about the locals—we're the nobodies. Prices go up when the tourists arrive. Stores close on Sundays when the tourists leave. And everyone keeps talking about what we can do for the tourists. Why don't they just leave us alone?

I was a bit taken aback to say the least. The purpose behind my visit to the classroom was to discuss waste management, and everything was going smoothly until the word tourist was somehow mentioned. That let loose a tidal wave of deep-rooted animosity, directed towards unknown people; this was not just your typical 'I'm glad autumn is here so I can find a parking space.' I'm a bit in the dark as to the source of these hostile feelings, especially when found in such young people.

First of all, I wonder what it is about tourists which deserves such wrath. Granted there are some who are condescending with clerks and loud in their boasting, but aren't there some locals whose behaviour is irksome year 'round? You don't judge people in a mass, or under a category which has no real definition; you take them as individuals and how they behave in your own environment. Everyone is offered courtesy and politeness, the only catch being that they are expected to be received in return. Once anyone breaks the rules, they must be prepared for the consequences.

(In the summertime, the only question which crosses my mind is how do you tell some people shopping downtown that the beach is three blocks away? Is there any way to legislate a dress code when people are away from the privacy of their own home? It's the return of the colder weather which brings modesty back to the streets, not the call back to the city.)

Tourism means that local people don't have to remain among the poorest paid in the province. It means there are more jobs in the summer than there are people to fill them, a problem in its own right. It means that after the crowds are gone, businesses can afford to remain open. It means people are working more months of the year so the February Blues aren't able to make them see red in frustration.

Of course tourism means that after Labour Day I must remember to do my grocery shopping before six o'clock. I can't expect to get gas after seven o'clock either. Who wants to drive into town on Sundays when you no longer have to work on this day of no rest in the summer?

The lifeblood of this community is in its ability to attract other people to the Highlands so they can enjoy its natural beauty. Tourists can respect that beauty and want to preserve it as much as the locals, who seem to be doing their fair share of cutting down trees and over-developing the lakes. When we plan events which enhance the countryside, then the people who arrive to take part in them will want to leave the countryside exactly the way they found it—so they can enjoy it the next time they're here. The opposite will be equally as true when we plan events designed solely for their money-making, or attendance-taking value. As a saying goes, somewhat transformed to fit in with this column, an area gets the tourists it deserves.

Perhaps it should be some of these business people who visit the classrooms; or the father who until recently was laid off in the winter and had to deal with that type of demoralization. No one needs preaching to, but there does need to be a deeper sense of understanding. Tourism is not us against them; it's everyone working together for the benefit of everyone.

Rowing through time: a snapshot

DOWN OUR ROAD

Sharon Lynch

IT WAS HER FAVOURITE DAY of the week. She and Ben had only been married a year. Although there were no children yet, the days were still long and work-filled for both of them. So when Sunday rolled around, it was a welcome change, a day to slow things down a bit, a day for visiting.

They were both up before dawn as usual. Sunday or not, the chores still had to get done. While he milked the cows, fed the livestock and cleaned the stalls, she got a fire going in the cook stove, brought water in from the yard pump and did the baking. Biscuits for breakfast, muffins and two pies for later. She had always helped with the baking at home so at seventeen, Mabel was an experienced cook. By the time Ben walked through the kitchen door, the pies were cooling on the counter and breakfast was on the table.

"Boy, she's right fresh out there this morning Mabel," he commented, as he pulled the chair closer to the stove and sat down to eat. The day promised to be sunny and mild, a perfect Indian summer Sunday, but the cold mornings reminded them winter wouldn't be too long coming. Mabel poured them both coffee and sat down to join him. But although she was just as hungry as he, it was hard to sit still and eat. She wanted to get going, get the day underway. They made this same trip every Sunday since being married last year, but she never tired of its excitement. And in the back of her mind she knew that when she started having babies it would probably change.

After they had eaten, she quickly did up the dishes and packed some food in the basket. Then, while Ben was bringing in wood for the night, she flew upstairs to the bedroom to change. In no time she was back down in the kitchen wearing her Sunday dress, all starched and pressed. Ben had on clean overalls and a fresh shirt. Mabel picked up the basket, Ben grabbed the old quilt and they headed for the lake.

They were going to visit Mabel's parents in Blairhampton and it would take them a fair part of the morning to get there. They were going by boat then foot. Back in those days, people travelled more by water than road. The roads were little more than wagon trails that took rough, roundabout routes. Often the fastest and smoothest way to get to your destination was to go by water.

As she stepped into the row boat, Mabel took a quick look to make sure her fishing pole was there.

Ben had put some worms in a tin can for her, so she was all set. He pushed the boat off and hopped in himself. As he took the oars and started pulling, the morning mist swirled just above the water, ghostly and silent as sleep. As they cleared the bay, they heard a sound and turned to see a Blue Heron crest the water and head up and away from them. There was no other sound but the dip, dip of the oars.

Mabel waited until they were out in the middle of Boshkung before she baited her hook and slipped it over the side of the boat. The quilt lay loosely across her legs and in an hour or so she wouldn't need its warmth, once the sun had been up for a while. Ben needed no quilt of course. The exercise kept him warm enough.

Mabel usually caught at least one fish on these Sunday trips. Ben rowed all the way from Boshkung, through the narrows of Little Boshkung and across

NORTHERN LIGHTS

WELL, I SUPPOSE I'VE shocked the pants off you with my confession of the 'real' reason I quit my column last year. If reading about it made you nervous... I think living through it scared the stuffing out of my family.

Like I said, it was a learning experience. Illness can do that for you. Not everything I learned was pleasant. I learned that some of the conditioning that we, (women especially) receive in our formative years, is very destructive. We spend almost all our lives giving in to what other people want because we musn't make waves. A lot of women have their personal lives all but buried under their 'duties' at home. Until, suddenly, it seems that they find themselves dead last on their own list of priorities. And feeling very angry about it. Then ashamed of their anger, so they stifle it.

I've discovered that I'm a bit more of a feminist than I thought I was. And guess what I found out? Putting me first isn't selfish. It's necessary. If I don't look after me, no one else will.

I have a statement of sorts stuck on my refrigerator these days. It says: As a person 1. I'm permitted to be less than perfect... People will still accept me. 2. Making mistakes is part of being human... Wise people learn from their mistakes. 3. Anger is a natural feeling. 4. When I'm sad, an appropriate response may be to cry. 5. I do not have to be in control all the times. 6. It's important to spend time

The rule about being good to myself is the hardest habit to learn after years of putting me last and feeling guilty every time you take time to read or take a walk relaxing in non-productive activities... to do nothing. 7. I am important and need to be taken care of just like my children and others. 8. Being good to myself is important as it energizes me, which in turn, enables me to have more to give others. 9. It's important to question. 10. I have an obligation to say no when I do not want to do something. If I say yes I may feel resentful or angry.

It wasn't easy for me to start living by that set of rules. That dirty word 'selfish' would keep popping up. And the first few times I said "no" to those who were used to taking advantage of me (especially family), they were openly shocked. I had to say "no" a lot of times before I got the message across that I wasn't the shoulder for the world.

And guilt trips... People know when they can lay them on you. I was manipulated by guilt trips for years. When I finally quit doing them, an almost constant ache between my shoulder blades disappeared.

The rule about being good to myself really works. But it's the hardest habit to learn after years of punishing yourself with stress, putting "me" last, and feeling guilty every time you take time to read a book or take a walk.

My "Stress Therapist" makes me keep a calendar. I have to make myself spend three hours a day doing something I want to do. So I walk a couple of miles. I read a lot. I'm writing again. I took up weaving in order to get concentration and discipline back into my life. That's another whole story.

But the rule worked. When I began walking again, I got exercise and fresh air and unstressed. Reading is important when you write. And writing is what I do. Weaving helped me regain logic and artistic accomplishment. It also made me sleep better. When I put them all together, I slowly started liking me, feeling better, having more energy, doing more, giving more. And that's not selfish.

I don't do 'shoulds' and 'musts' and 'have tos' much anymore. I try to do 'coulds' and 'woulds' and 'want tos'. I get more done. A few people weren't too happy when I crawled out from under their thumbs, but that's their problem.

I'm so lucky. Most of the people who were important to my life eventually came around to understanding and supporting me. I didn't end up alone, like I thought I might. I found a wonderful new group of friends who held and hugged me when it was bad, and hugged and praised me when it got good. I felt a sort of 'reborn' understanding of life and love and the order of things. My mind is hungry to learn all it can. I'm not sure just what I'll do with this vast new store of knowledge. Probably nothing profound, just positive.

And every day now is the first day of the rest of my life.

Redmen manage a tie against Lindsay

by KENT MILLER
HHSS Student

Strong winds, cold weather and an improved L.C.V.I. soccer team brought the Redmen to a 0-0 tie with the L.C.V.I. seniors last Wednesday in Lindsay.

In the first half, both teams came out strongly. The wind was against the Redmen, giving L.C.V.I. the advantage. The Redmen were outplayed in the first half, and were forced to rely on their defensive abilities. Goal keeper Pat Casey kept the Redmen alive with two outstanding saves. The Redmen forwards got a couple of excellent scoring chances but were unable to put the ball in the net.

In the second half the Redmen came out blazing, stopping the L.C.V.I. players in their own half. The Redmen had handfuls of scoring chances but were unable to get by a much improved L.C.V.I. goal keeper.

In the last 10 minutes of the game, coach Walter Tose made a number of substitutions for exhausted players in a bid to keep up the Redmen's endurance. He also had to motivate a frustrated soccer team to keep going. Through the Redmen's desperation, an L.C.V.I. player got the ball into the Redmen's end and got off a threatening shot that was excellently saved by the second-half goal keeper, David Kinsella. That stop saved the game in the last four minutes.

The game finally ended with a disappointed Redmen team but still rated number one in Kawartha West standings. The Redmen still hold high hopes for the Kawartha finals.

Special mention goes to Cecil Smith, Darren Warburton, Mark Sorenson, Paddy Taylor, Jan Haedicke and Darryl Winder.

Strong support from the bench helped motivate the players on the field.

This week the Redmen play Fenelon Falls at Fenelon and await the results of other games this week and next. Haliburton will play a one game, sudden death, play off game against the second place team (as yet undecided) at their home field on Monday, October 24, starting at 2:00 p.m.

Juniors still winless

The Junior Redmen soccer team played a stronger game against L.C.V.I. last Wednesday. They managed to reduce the goals against by more than half since the last encounter of these two teams. The experienced L.C.V.I. team is comfortably in first place having downed every team with a margin of at least six goals.

A solid effort from the full back line and mid-fielders, Jeff Nash and Rob MacDonald slowed L.C.V.I. down. Bart Whiting and Joey Shaw in the forward positions had a number of breaks but were unable to score. Final score was L.C.V.I. six, Haliburton zero.

The Junior Redmen travel to Fenelon Falls this Wednesday for their final game.

On October 14 the Redmen football teams travelled to Fenelon Falls to play their second game against the Falcons. In the first quarter of the senior game, there was no scoring by either team. In the second quarter the Fenelon Falcons hit deep inside their 10 yard line. Their quarterback dropped back to pass and the conversion was blocked. Chris Allaire intercepted and ran for the touchdown. Fenelon appeared on the score board after a missed field goal inside Haliburton's 20 yard line. At the end of half time the score was 6-1 for Haliburton.

In the second half Fenelon had two or three opportunities to score inside the Redmen's 20 yard line, but Haliburton's defense played well, and no points were surrendered.

In the third quarter, Ron Perrin quick kicked down to Fenelon's five yard line and gave Haliburton good field position. Two plays later Jason Rowden intercepted a play from Fenelon, but the Redmen stopped after two plays. With third down on Fenelon's 35 yard line, Ron Perrin kicked a single and made the score 7-1.

During this time, Haliburton played a conservative offensive game. Their defense held Fenelon in their end for the rest of the quarter.

In a chippy fourth quarter, one of Fenelon's players was ejected from the game along with Mark Robinson for rough play. Scott Russell completed 67 yards rushing, Jeff Francis 57 yards rushing, Taly Williams threw 10 times and completed one to Jeff Feero for 20 yards. Outstanding defensive plays were put forth by Jason Rowden for interceptions, Chris Allaire with a defensive touchdown and Kyle Hewitt. Honourable mention for the offense goes to Scott Russell, Jamie Bruce and Ron Perrin.

The juniors were next to play against the Fenelon Falcons. The scoreboard was left empty for the first half of the game. In the third quarter Darren Danylyshen got a 33 counter hand off from Shawn Perrin, a convert from Brian Waller, and ran for a 30 yard touchdown. Later on, Danylyshen set up after a 43 power to Brian Waller who broke for a 55 yard run and was tackled at the Fenelon 20 yard line. Two plays later Shawn Perrin hit Craig Bain with a 20 yard pass in the end zone. The conversion was blocked by a Fenelon player.

Brian Waller had an excellent game, completing 97 yards rushing and Darren Danylyshen had 94 yards rushing. Shawn Perrin threw six passes with one completion. Brian Waller threw one pass and took the winning completion.

Defensively, it was a strong game. Good defensive players were Darren Danylyshen, Randy Bull,

M.H.L. opens 88/89 season

THIS WEEK IN THE M.H.L.

by Chip Trueman

For most people, Sunday evening was just another relaxing evening, but for 72 local men it was the M.H.L. season opener. The first game saw Elstone Motors battle it out with Emmerson Lumber. The pace was fast and after two periods of hockey, Emmerson Lumber found itself ahead by four with score 5-1. Elstone Motors however, connected in the third period, scoring five goals while allowing only one. The game ended in a tie, 6-6. Strong performances came from the lumbermen's Barry Boice and Ron Abbs, as well as the motorists' Tim Davies and Joe Roberts.

In the second game, Bishop and Wilson's goalie Kevin Finch put on a great show, frustrating the boys from Deblers Drilling by allowing only one goal. Finchey was two minutes away from a rare M.H.L. shutout when Scott Rae augered one by him. Final score was Bishop and Wilson 7, Deblers Drillers 1. Could B and W be the team to beat this year? By the way, Pat Wilson's two penalties were not only a personal high but undoubtedly spoil his chance of winning the M.H.L. Lady Bing.

The last game of the night belonged to Haliburton Lumber as they were victorious over Curry Motors. Final score was not available at the time of printing. Good idea K.E.!

A footnote before closing: Dysart arena surprised everyone with a new clock and P.A. system. Does this mean that the old "scoreboard" is for sale? It would make a great conversation piece in someone's bedroom. I'm Chip and that was... THIS WEEK IN THE M.H.L.

Haliburton Novices lose home opener 7-6

Haliburton OMHA Novices played their home opener on Sunday afternoon before an enthusiastic crowd of supporters. In spite of outstanding goal tending by Blaze Foster and Greg Schell the home side came out on the short end of a 7-6 score. Oakwood opened the scoring and led 2-0 until No. 10, Aaron Galbraith assisted by No. 6 Joshua Dennis, tallied for Haliburton. Oakwood scored again to end the period.

The second period saw more of the same good effort by both sides. Aaron Galbraith and Joshua Dennis teamed up again to close the gap by a goal. Oakwood put another marker on the board before No. 8 Joshua Burke scored unassisted to make it 4-3 at the end of the second.

The third period was very exciting as the home boys worked hard at a comeback. The Oakwood squad had other ideas and scored again. Joshua Burke lit the light again with an assist from No. 9

Andrew Madill, but Oakwood once again came back with two goals to make it look impossible with a 7-5 lead. The never die Haliburton squad came within one goal of tying it up with two goals by Joshua Burke assisted by Aaron Galbraith.

The team's next game is away against Little Britain on Sunday, October 23, 1988.

Councils should unite on recycling: MOE

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

The Ministry of the Environment has suggested that before it sends one of its representatives to talk to Stanhope council about recycling possibilities and funding, the township should contact other councils in the county which are interested in recycling. This way, a joint meeting can be held and there will be a greater idea of how much support the idea has in the area.

For the past few months, Stanhope has been looking into the pros and cons of starting a recycling program, contacting other counties to see what they are doing and asking the ministry if there was any funding for a feasibility study, either one done locally or by a consulting firm. The ministry said it would be pleased to make a presentation to council, but that other councils should be contacted as well.

In the meantime, council has received a letter from Muskoka Containerized Services, MCS, in Bracebridge. Donald Coates had read in the paper that Stanhope was considering a recycling program and wrote council with the information that it is starting up a "blue box" collection service for 12,000 homes in the Muskokas. (Residents put recyclable material in plastic blue boxes to be picked up by the waste disposal firm.) "This is being done for the Muskoka Recycling Association which is receiving the MOE and Ontario Multi Materials Recycling Inc., OMMRI.

"In addition we are building a major recycling/processing centre, supplying recycling containers and special equipment, developing and currently constructing a new one-stop rural recycling centre and are about to institute a commercial cardboard recycling project in Huntsville."

In a telephone interview, Coates says the plan will allow MCS to sort ferrous and metal cans, build bunkers to store glass and purchase a paper sorting conveyor which will help cut back on the labour required. Recycling is labour intensive and finding enough people to work at the plants is often a problem.

As well, Coates says he has been in contact with the County of Haliburton Association for a Naturally Good Environment, CHANGE, about setting up a meeting to discuss recycling possibilities in this county.

Traffic will be enlightened

by LEN PIZZEY
Editor

New traffic lights should be in place at the main intersection of Haliburton by the end of the year. The lights will allow an advance green signal to facilitate turns and ease some of the congestion that plagues the intersection on weekends and in the peak summer tourist season.

Dysart et al council decided to purchase the lights, at a cost of about $10,000, after they were recommended in a traffic study completed for council this past summer.

Funds for the lights were available in the 1988 municipal budget, reeve Fearrey said.

Moore challenges Nesbitt for the Minden reeveship

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

Minden businessman Ray Moore is challenging incumbent Sinc Nesbitt for the position of Reeve in the township of Anson, Hindon and Minden.

Moore says he decided to run because he didn't like the idea of Nesbitt running unopposed. "I don't like to see acclamation, it's bad for the system. I believe people deserve a choice, this prevents complacency."

If elected Moore would like to set an agenda for the next term to give the council direction and guidance. "Experience has taught me that many businesses and councils get bogged down and overwhelmed, causing confrontations with staff and ratepayers, using band-aid measures because no clear planning with objectives was done."

Among the issues Moore would like to see addressed is a review of By-law 86-26, the proposed new zoning by-law which is on hold until the flood plain zoning issue is resolved. Moore says it has not been enacted into law and is "creating confusion and a vacuum for the present council, committees, staff and the public for the past three years." Moore would like to see the problem resolved and says "it should not have been left hanging around."

Moore would also like to initiate action to meet what he has identified as some crucial needs for the Minden community. A second bridge over the Gull River is a project he would like to see come to pass. If, for any reason, the Main Street bridge is closed, Moore says resident living in the north-west part of the village would be cut off from prompt emergency service. Ambulance of fire department vehicles would be forced to detour across the Scotch Line, wasting valuable time. Moore says a second bridge could also be used to divert industrial traffic, like transport trucks, away from the downtown core where they aggravate the traffic problem.

Ray Moore

And big projects don't have to cost the township big bucks. In the case of a second bridge, Moore says there is plenty of government funding, up to 75 per cent, available to the municipality.

Moore thinks Minden's Business Improvement Area (BIA) should be expanded, even out to the Hwy. 35 by-pass, in order to keep the downtown core viable. He would also like to see an industrial commission set up to advise council on future developments and job opportunities.

All efforts should be made, in Moore's opinion, to keep the Minden Hospital open and expand the level of service it provides to southern Haliburton County.

But the real focus will be at the county level, says Moore. He believes that in the very near future the County Council will be expanded and given more powers to administer services. Such areas as planning, health and welfare, waste management and environmental concerns, public works, water and sewer service and fire protection may all end up on the county plate. This is something local council will have to aware of and carefully address.

When he was a councillor in Gravenhurst, Moore says he strongly opposed the centralization of powers given to the district government. However once the process was complete, Moore says he was forced to adjust his way of thinking. "When you see what happens with the amalgamation of roads, fire, water and sewer, you realize it's so much more economical. There is no duplication of service and it's easier to predict costs for the whole county."

Now is the time, says Moore, for Haliburton to pay attention to what is happening to the south. He says the rapid growth of Toronto is forcing people to look for new places to settle, where houses and commercial land are less expensive, and this will mean more people will begin heading north. "We'll have to face it because we certainly can't stand in its way." Moore says it's going to be necessary to gauge and plan for the growth of the area.

Moore is careful to point out that he has no quarrel with any of the councillors and is not seeking election in the interest of self-gratification. He does feel that he can work well with the municipal staff and all successful candidates in the Nov. 14 election. "I'm offering myself to serve the community, I feel it's important that people do participate at the municipal level."

Moore received his education and began his employment in Toronto, but moved to Muskoka where he lived for 21 years. While there he served on the Gravenhurst Council for two terms and was also a councillor on the District of Muskoka Council. During that time he served on all committees of council including public works, administration and finance, planning and development and health and welfare.

Since moving to Minden three years ago, Moore has served on the Planning Advisory Board, the Parks and Recreation Committee and since January has chaired the Parks Board. He is a Rotarian and a Director of the Chamber of Commerce.

Stevens addresses key election issues

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

Lewis Stevens has entered the race to secure a seat on Minden council in the Nov. 14 elections, armed with definite opinions on some of the key issues facing the township.

The environment is one issue that has received a lot of attention lately and Stevens feels we are relying too heavily on land-fill for waste management. "Recycling is the way to go, not as an end result, but in order to lessen the load and give us time to find a lasting solution." He feels that this is an issue that could be handled more effectively at a county level.

Water levels is another hot issue, and Stevens wants to see the area retain some control over what's happening to our lakes. "Recreational water is the mainstay of our economy, and we deserve to have our water at a reasonable level." He says it's imperative that Haliburton County find a way to voice our concerns to the Trent-Severn Waterway. "All of our needs must be taken into consideration and implemented in conjunction with our southern friends."

Stevens refers to the Minden Fire Department as one of the most underrated services in the area. He says good fire protection is essential not only for protecting property, but also to attract more people into the area. "A well instructed, equipped and manned service requires funding. If it's public money that is needed, we have to arrange it because we go nowhere with out it."

On the subject of public access to water, Stevens says he doesn't like the divisive nature of the issue. "I don't like to think of two classes of people, those who live on the lakes,

Allin Cooper

Cooper believes the answer to water levels lies in more reservoir lakes

Cooper would like to boost economic development as a Minden councillor

Allin Cooper is running for one of the three positions of councillor in Anson, Hindon and Minden on a platform of increasing the development in the township.

Cooper intends to encourage development throughout the municipality, including lakeshore, industrial and business areas. He says right now the municipality does not seem to have any clear direction. He has not yet worked out the details for the development plan, and says he would like to use his position on council to gain access to the information and people necessary to formulate such a plan.

Cooper says area residents have to start thinking about future development. Between the river and the hill in the centre of the village, he says there is not a lot of room for development. Development planning, says Cooper, is not something you can work at from the outside looking in.

Experience working in the Ontario Hydro generating plant has given

Cooper, what he says is a better than average understanding of water levels, a problem that has recently plagued the county. He says the only solution is to build more reservoirs in order to adequately supply the Trent-Severn with the water they require and still maintain the levels in our own lakes. He realizes the project would be an expensive one, but says the potential for developing more lake front property on the new lakes would be a beneficial side-effect. Bill Scott, as our federal MP should be getting involved in resolving the situation, says Cooper.

As far as public access to the water is concerned, Cooper says he supports the present council's position of not selling any public water-front property. "The land should be used by the people, not sold to fatten the municipal coffers."

Fire protection is probably a service that would best be assumed by the county in Cooper's opinion.

"Minden has been providing fire protection for Lutterworth and Snowdon for years and losing money doing it. A county system is the only way."

Cooper supports a recycling program to ease the demand on our dumps and recognizes the need to educate the public on responsible waste management. He would also like to see the lakes protected by ensuring that sewage systems are environmentally safe.

Cooper moved to the Minden area in 1954 after serving in the Air Force for three years. He worked for Ontario Hydro for 20 years and then went into business for himself. His wood cutting supplies business employs six people and Cooper says he's learned what it means to have to meet a payroll and supervising operations in a manner in keeping with the funds available. Cooper has served a previous two year term as councillor in Anson, Hindon and Minden in 1969-70. He has served on the executive of the Minden Legion and has been president twice.

Incumbent counts on experience in school trustee race

by MARTHA PERKINS

Staff Reporter

Now that he's been representing Stanhope on the school board for 11 years, trustee LeRoy Eager feels he can really get involved in board decisions—and enjoy it at the same time.

"Mostly I enjoy the work," he says of his reason for putting his name in. "It's interesting and of course now that I have the experience I can get involved."

On the Victoria Street School issue, he says "As far as I'm concerned, it depends on what the future has." Enrollment is always up and down and it's hard to predict what accommodation might be needed.

As to fixing up the school, "I can't in all conscientiousness see putting money into that old building." It will cost $500-600,000 to bring it up to standards and that would be half the cost of a new building. Even if renovations were made, it still wouldn't create more class space, he says.

"Personally, why I have no emotional ties to Victoria Street so I can look at it in a more direct manner without getting all emotional," he says. Whether he would favour building onto J.D. Hodgson or building a new school on the Victoria Street site, Eager says demolishing the building would cost half as much as building a new one and "I can't see any point in opening up another site" other than the one at J.D. Hodgson.

The main thing is to look at things "from day to day, year to year, and not get all excited."

In Minden, Eager feels the board has found a good solution in the former Dollo store site, and even though the lease is only for three years, "I don't think Mr. Dollo would kick out a good tenant just because its lease is up."

He would have qualms about building a major addition onto the Archie Stouffer School because it would cut down on the amount of play area. "The school yard is getting pretty small as it is" but if a large addition did have to be built on the site, the board could tear down and old house and barn which it owns adjoining the school property, he says.

When it comes to the future of small schools in the county, "as long as the school can be operated with a good situation, we should leave our small schools open. Closing a school is a last resort. Little kids should be kept close to home."

But as to one of the most contentious issues, the cost of maintaining the present system, Eager says "there isn't much we can do."

Eastmure wants board open to parents' ideas

Running as a trustee for the school board is something Curtis Eastmure "has had in the back of my mind for a long time." After devoting much of his time to the Chamber of Commerce and Nordic Trail Association, he thinks it's time he ran for an elected position. As well, there hasn't been a trustee election for many years, depriving people with the chance to choose who they want to represent them.

The accommodation issue is a big one for Curtis, who has one child in school and another who will follow in a few years. "I honestly don't think that the current board took a hard look at both sides of the issue at Victoria Street School," he says, which is why the board was so surprised by the work the parent's committee did towards presenting their side of the issue. To put the kindergarten classes at the Sir Sandford Fleming College campus was a good short-term solution, but some other solution must be found.

He will not commit himself to a stance on whether a new school should be built on the old site or at the J.D. Hodgson site, but "the first thing we have to look at is what's best for the children." He knows that provincial capital funding has not been abundant in the past years but "I would fight the ministry for what would be the best for the children's education."

"If it can be done at J. D. Hodgson with the right sort" of planning, then so be it, but "I'm not convinced that is the best solution." The ministry of education would have the final word, but once more Eastmure says "If you can make a pretty good case you should be prepared to fight for it. You have to stand up and say we're ready to do something."

One other issue Eastmure has been following in the news is the debate on the Lord's Prayer's role in the school, and whether it should be part of the school agenda or not. "I feel it should be left up to the individual boards" and not be a provincial decision.

However, he is considering whether the province should step in to provide province-wide testing for students wishing to enroll in post-secondary education.

"When I was in university, a lot of my fellow students had a great deal of trouble putting pen to paper," and today, many colleges are complaining that students are dropping out after a year or two because they can't handle the work load.

"The universities have to have some sort of ruling stick they can rely on" when trying to decide whether an Ontario Scholar (an average of 80 per cent) from one school has had to meet the same standards as an Ontario Scholar from another. There are presently no standards the universities can follow. However, Eastmure says the testing should just be for students wishing to continue their education and not all graduates should have to write the test.

As to ensuring that local teachers are providing the best education possible, Eastmure says that's very difficult to determine. "You obviously have to work with the teachers and rely on their experience. A board can't be high handed (but) I think for a long time the local board has gone along with the wishes of the teachers and not questioned them."

Each board's responsibility is to answer the needs of the community, he concludes.

Daniels has 'something to offer'

Murray Daniels is a kind of "election breaker." When the Echo Bay resident was first asked to put his name in for councillor, his reaction was a firm "no". But when he thought about it for a few days and heard that there was not going to be an election because there weren't enough candidates, he decided to run for his first seat on a municipal council.

"I can't stand complacency and we've got to have an election," he says of his recent decision.

To counteract his lack of municipal experience, Daniels says his career as an automotive manager for Bell Canada could be put to good use on council. He was in charge of a large maintenance budget, with a large personnel to oversee. Towards the end of his career he travelled about the province helping various municipalities with their service and teaching courses. "So I've had lots of experience dealing with people and lots of experience dealing with unions."

"I feel I have something to offer."

Daniels and his wife Olive bought their Boshkung Lake residence in 1973 and after his retirement in 1981, moved here permanently, allowing him to see both sides of cottagers/locals' concerns.

These years have also made him more aware of what's happening to our environment. He'd strongly echo the call for a change to the Trent Severn Waterway management and supports the county's decision to undertake a waste management study.

"We produce an awful lot of garbage and I'm not sure we couldn't be recycling some of this," he says,

Murray Daniels

at the same time admitting there's "a lot of things I've got to learn" before he can come up with any concrete plans. "But you've got to start someplace."

With budgeting, Daniels says there are a lot of people who could afford to pay more taxes for more services, but there are a lot of people who can't, and these are the ones council should be concerned about. "You've got to control (spending) pretty close. We can't go out and say yes to everything."

Development is also something which has to be controlled and in this respect, Daniels has a lot of praise for the present council. "They should be congratulated for controlling development this far. We've had a lot of talented and conscientious people" on council and he's sad to see some of them go. But when one person steps down, there must be others willing to take their place.

Tourism has to be promoted for that is what is sustaining the township at the present time. However, should a developer want to promote tourism by building time sharing units, "I don't approve of it at all." There must be progress but it must be controlled, he concludes.

Firm environmental stand tal factors, such as acid rain, do not get any worse. Lake quality is a particular worry as well as dumps which are nearing their capacity.

"We have to take a firm stand on the environment and development is going to be part of it," she says. When someone comes in with an idea, it is council's responsibility to look at the pros and cons, especially relating to how they'd affect present lifestyles and expectations. "I think we have a beautiful township and we should keep it that way."

As to time-sharing in particular, Harrison says "I have very mixed feelings about that and I'm not certain they're what's best for the area."

On the double taxation issue, Harrison says that they own both a home and a cottage in Stanhope and can understand concerns about the heavy burden of education tax. But the question has to be asked "Where does the money come from" and it's the province which must do the answering.

Harrison feels it's partly her duty to run for council. After living here for so long, she feels she must give something back to the area, and sitting on council is just one way. In the past, she's been an active member of the board of management as well as the recreation committee.

bly is entering a restructuring process in the next term, and an environmental impact study, and that probably I was best equipped to represent Dysart in these instances" Fearrey said.

Other items likely to be on council's agenda in the next term are consideration of a large new landfill site to take the place of the rapidly filling site near Haliburton, and an official plan update including flood plain mapping.

Fearrey said there is a "catch" to his decision to serve another term as reeve, however.

"If I'm going to be reeve I have to state that I can no longer entertain the constant visitations by ratepayers at my place of business."

Fearrey said he would go back to a measure he tried years ago in which he had office hours on Monday evenings to discuss issues of concern to ratepayers. He will also be available at nights and on weekends, as he always has been in the past.

"I just cannot do a regular job and entertain the interruptions that happen daily" Fearrey said. "If people can accept that, then I'm prepared to dedicate my energy, time and whatever ability I have, to another term."

representation in Ottawa. "Victoria-Haliburton is the only region in Ontario without a transitional home for women in crisis." She said Scott and Liberal MPP John Eakins seem to be sympathetic but, "tacit support is not enough." She said the riding needs action on this and other local issues. "We need a strong NDP presence and I would like to assume that role," she said.

Guest speaker at the nomination convention was Gillian Sandenman, a past president of the Ontario NDP, Service was cut by 23 per cent, the Great Lakes pollution-monitoring program was eliminated and the Mulroney cabinet cut $35 million from the energy conservation budget. Sandenman said that by the year 1990 the total number of jobs cut will have risen to 800. "Brian Mulroney has no grasp of the need for the environment," she said, "all he sees is mega-projects and megabucks. The NDP would stop this process and restore necessary measures."

Sandenman then took shots at the

Cathy Vainio

-and making the Minister of the Environment a member of the Cabinet's Priorities and Planning Committee.

An NDP government would also enact a National Drinking Water Act to establish standards for safe drinking water and help cities and towns upgrade their water and sewage treatment.

After the nomination meeting, Vainio told reporters that her campaign strategy was to knock on as many doors and get to know as many people as she can. She says she believes the voters in Victoria-Haliburton will vote according to the issues. "Just because a candidate has been in power two decades doesn't mean he should keep the seat until he chooses to retire," she said referring to Scott's 23 year hold on the riding.

When asked how to differentiate between her platform and that of Liberal Glass who is also campaigning with a pro-environment, anti-Free Trade message, Vainio said where the Liberals are appealing to the middle class the NDP are looking out for all people including those on the lower end of the income scale.

People want 'strong action' on water a vice-president of the federal NDP and the NDP federal candidate for the Peterborough riding.

She said the NDP are entering this election with their strongest position ever, with three times the popular support it had in 1984. Although the Conservatives are currently ahead in the polls, Sandenman said in meeting with Peterborough constituents during the campaign she has found that many voters are still undecided and many Tory and Liberal voters are thinking of moving their support to the NDP.

"People in Victoria-Haliburton value their natural heritage and environment," said Sandenman. "They want strong action to protect our air and water and land. They don't want to see acid rain ruining the beautiful lakes of the Haliburton Highlands and killing the trees, they don't want to see Toronto's garbage buried in their farmland and they don't want to see their own landfill sites full of overflowing with run-off polluting streams and rivers."

There have been years of neglect, she said, neglect by the Conservatives following in the footsteps of years of Liberal neglect. She noted that Prime Minister Brian Mulroney allowed a series of cuts at Environment Canada and 432 jobs were eliminated. This resulted in progress being stopped in the areas of renewable energy, PCB's and on recycling. The Canadian Wildlife

Liberals, saying they have always treated the environment as a secondary concern. "The Liberals developed an Environmental Assessment Review Process that is so riddled with loopholes and exemptions as to be almost useless. None of the projects that should have been assessed, ever were."

Sandenman then outlined the measures that an NDP government would undertake to protect the environment. They include:

- enacting a new Environmental Protection Act that includes firm national standards for pollution control, backed by tough sanctions;
- putting crimes against the environment in the Criminal Code;
- introducing an Environmental Bill of Rights that ensures Canadians the right to a healthy environment, the right to sue governments for failing to protect the environment and the right to challenge polluters in court,

Soviets a threat: Dobbins

bins. "The Soviets are mobilizing and building a war machine," he says. "It's written in the Soviet constitution that they intend to dominate the world and there's no reason to believe they have stopped pursuing that goal. There are certain parties in Canada that would have us pull out of NATO, they are either grossly misinformed and misguided or blatant liars. The NATO missiles are the only thing keeping the Soviets out of Germany."

Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's new program of glasnost, an opening of the communist system, is a public relations tactic not a sincere attempt at reform, according to Dobbins. "The arms reduction talks are an absolute farce, all the Soviets want is the U.S. to stop research into SDI (Strategic Defense Initiative, commonly known as Star Wars) so they can catch up. All they need is a few years."

The main plank in the Commonwealth Party's platform is a dramatic increase in the amount of money spent in the area of research and development. By rewarding companies who participate in research with tax credits, Dobbins says the entire economy will be stimulated. According to the candidate, every dollar spent on research will inject 17 dollars into the economy. "A growth in research is the only thing which can stimulate the economy. To stifle research is to hold back the economy's full potential."

The proposed increase in research would occur in all sectors of the economy, "from agriculture to Star Wars." Dobbins defends the party's support of Star Wars research, in which the current federal government is not involved, because of the benefits that the world would reap. "There have more benefits for all of mankind since the development of the space program than any other time."

Although the money for new projects would originate from the government, whether through grants or tax credits, Dobbins says the resultant growth in the economy would mean a greater tax base and increased revenue for the state, so it could be accomplished "without an increase in taxes and without costing the government a cent." He estimates a pay-back period of one year before the benefits would show up in the national treasury.

The Commonwealth Party also wants to reform federally funded social programs. "The country can't continue spending the amount it does on social programs, it's broke now. Our aim is to make people more independent and not reward them for not working," says Dobbins. "We have to educate people that they can't keep taking from the economy without giving anything back." But Dobbins admits the task won't be an easy one. "The economic ship is so big and has been going in the wrong direction for so long, it will take years to get it turned around and headed in the right direction." Dobbins accuses the government of handling everything inefficiently and social programs are no exception. "People who need help aren't getting enough and people who don't need it are able to take advantage."

The Party is willing to tackle the ugly issues no one else wants to talk about, says Dobbins. "There are no fun issues in this campaign but if we don't address them we are all going to be in a lot of trouble."

The Commonwealth Party is opposed to the Conservative govern-and those who don't. I would hope that there are sufficient areas of public land which could and should be developed to allow all area residents to have water access for pleasure and enjoyment, with consideration of area residents and the environment." He says people who build on the lake expect to use the water and if they build next to a public access they should expect other people will use the area, also to enjoy the water.

When it comes to promoting the Minden area, Stevens says credit should be given to the service clubs, cottager's associations, sports organizations and the Chamber of Commerce. He says they do a better job of promoting the area than the council would ever have time or resources to do and they should be assisted in any way possible. "They require and deserve the help, understanding and consideration of the Council and area residents in the promotion of their activities, because no one can do it better."

Stevens says all residents of the community, whether it be seniors retiring to the area, seasonal residents or permanent residents who grew up in Minden, deserve to have their needs met by the council they elect. "Council reports to them and I want to be there."

Stevens was born and raised in Minden. He served with the Canadian Army in Camp Borden and worked in the automotive industry in Oakville before returning to Minden in 1971. He is currently the owner and operator of the Minden Shell.

Twelve Mile to the cemetery, and she fished the whole time, both ways. This time of year, she might get lucky and catch a lake trout, because they were closer to the surface, but usually it was a bass. There was no one else on the lake and they could hear birds and other rustling sounds from shore. Sound always travelled farther over water.

They didn't want any wind, unless it was slight and going with them. A strong wind could really slow them down and make it all the harder for Ben. Neither of them could swim, so they kept an eye on the sky too. Today they had nothing to worry about. It couldn't have been better. Clear, cloudless and almost calm. A flock of geese honked overhead and Mabel felt a tug on the line. She waited then gave a tug, but nothing. Well it was a long trip; she might get something yet.

Just before noon they touched shore by the Twelve Mile cemetery. Ben's forehead was damp and his shirt sleeves creased from being rolled up and bunched at his elbows. They sat for a few minutes to give him a breather, munching on muffins and lemonade. Then they started to walk to Blairhampton. It took about another hour and by then the sun felt hot on their backs as they tramped over the rough road, a trail really, to Mabel's parents. Thank goodness it wasn't spring. Those blackflies had made it a miserable walk back in May.

Her father was sitting in the rocking chair on the front porch watching for them as they rounded the pines at the end of the laneway. He jumped up and went in to tell Mabel's mother they had arrived. She came out wiping her hands on her apron, smiling ear to ear. Behind her followed Mabel's three brothers, two sisters-in-law and some cousins on her father's side.

In no time the men had gathered around Ben and then they all went down to the barn while the women went back into the house. There was a lot of news since the week before. Although the women had lots to tell each other, they knew darn well the men were doing more than talk in the barn.

Mabel's mother was a great cook and the table was set with the good dishes and a clean cloth. When they sat down for dinner, Mabel felt a twinge of homesickness. But it only lasted a minute and she looked over at Ben and smiled.

After the meal, the men sat out on the porch,

Wolves' call quickens step smoking and talking while the women did the dishes and talked some more. This was the time problems with health, babies or neighbours were discussed, with everyone giving advice and encouragement to one another.

By now it was late afternoon and time for Ben and Mabel to start their walk back to the boat waiting for them at Twelve Mile. The sun was still warm but by the time they got on the water, it would be cool and Mabel would be glad for the quilt on her legs then.

As Ben pushed off from shore, the far side of the lake was in shadow. It would be dark before they reached their own little bay again. Just before night fell she caught a nice bass. The taste of it at breakfast tomorrow would be a pleasant reminder of this day, she thought, wrapping the quilt tighter around her legs. The moonlight was bright tonight, but once Ben rowed into the lee of the bay, it was blacker than pitch. Mabel lit the lamp and held it up high, so Ben could steer around the old stump.

Walking back up to the farmhouse, they stopped for a minute to listen to the wolves. The call came from far away but it made Mabel and Ben step that much quicker.

Dysart's deputies will fight for seat

by LEN PIZZEY

Editor

The slate of candidates in Dysart et al is now official, ending weeks of speculation about who would or would not be trying for office.

Murray Fearrey will be back as reeve by acclamation, having bowed to pressure from concerned ratepayers and reversed an earlier decision to step down.

For deputy reeve, a race is underway between incumbent Sid Cooper and former deputy reeve Bill Davis, who resigned early in the last term to avoid possible conflict with his work as an ambulance attendant.

In Ward 1, the village of Haliburton, incumbent Dorothy Baker has stepped down. Joan Irish and Bob Nichol Jr. are running for the seat.

It's a three-person race in Ward 2, with incumbent John Parish being challenged by former by-law enforcement officer Bob English, and Miles Roberts.

Ward 3, Harcourt, will be filled by acclamation, as incumbent Lloyd Leadbeater is unchallenged.

In Ward 4, the Guilford area, a seat that was Sid Cooper's before he was moved up to deputy reeve two years ago, newcomers Brian Watts and John Thompson are in the running.

There will not be a ballot in Ward 5. Incumbent Glen Hodgson is back on council by acclamation.

Dysart now has four trustees seats on the board of education, and six people will try to win them. Incumbents Len Salvatori, Wayne W. Wood, Lynn Craigmyle, Nancy Stinson and Joan Sawyer are joined on the ballot by Tim Casey.

More detailed coverage of the candidates and their platforms will be included in issues of The Echo leading up to the November 14 municipal election.

Gun laws vague, reader

MORE LETTERS

ship and gun laws in Canada, only to find out some disturbing things. Firearms regulations in Canada are best described as vague. But as that goes what difference does the law make when bureaucrats and the police have adopted a "make the rules as you play" policy.

Some of you may recall a news item from a while back, where 900 Uzi, Sterling and Sten sub-machine guns were seized out in Alberta. It was never brought out that these guns were seized illegally by the police. The gun importer had broken no laws, the guns were no longer full-auto "machine guns", but were permanently converted to semi-automatic fire only. Someone in authority decided that these guns might be converted to prohibited firearms. Nobody, so far, has given the government a foundation for this decision. Now, several gun importers are being stonewalled by bureaucrats who practically change the meaning of the English language to alter gun laws in order for them to conform to their beliefs.

Recently, I had a conversation with someone from the Commissioner of Firearms. I asked about the discrepancies regarding restrictions on firearms, why some were restricted and some of same basic design were not. The reply was a shrug and an arrogant "because the government says so". On further questioning I found out that our government is insecure. Those in authority are afraid of too many non-sporting guns being in the hands of Canadian citizens. I laughed at the guy, I mean the place isn't a banana-republic yet. The man kept a straight face—these guys are really worried that a bunch of radicals are going to run amuck. I never realized how much the government mistrusted us.

So you hunters are thinking, "what has this got to do with me?" First any gun, not just ex-military guns can be made into a prohibited weapon, with the help of a hacksaw. Therefore in theory your old single shot .22 could be confiscated on that basis. Don't think stuff like that won't happen because it already has.

Secondly and just as ridiculous, the Crown is using the basis as alluded to in the seizure of the smg's, that any gun that was originally full-auto or even originally designed as full-auto should still be regarded as full-auto and therefore prohibited. The amount of converted guns sold since 1948 is in the thousands, so far with no terrorist problems. There is a big loop hole when they say, "designed as full-auto", because many hunting rifles are based on full-automatic ancestors, they too could be classed as prohibited weapons. Kiss your Mini-14 or Valmet Hunter goodbye, because they are direct descendants of full-auto guns. Before some of you start waving your arms about guns and violence, and pointing to the U.S., let me point somewhere else. Switzerland has the highest gun ownership per capita in the world, this includes among other things automatic weapons. But lo and behold homicides related to such guns have not increased since 1931. Norway, Sweden and Denmark follow the same example as Switzerland.

Conversely Britain and West Germany have very strict regulations on guns, but violent crime related to firearms increases annually. Canada with its new gun laws that were introduced under Trudeau, has experienced an increase in violent crime. I'm not saying that everybody should own a gun, good grief no way. What I am saying is that anti-gun groups and some people in government are pushing for laws not based on facts but on irrational fears and misinformation. It seems the prevailing attitude in our government is that Canadians are imbeciles with criminal tendencies. You can see that if you look at how many rights have been chiselled away supposedly for our own protection.

I would recommend that instead of sitting back with a blank look when some chuckle-headed law is introduced or when those who are supposed to be serving us start acting like heavies, maybe it would be more appropriate to remind them who they get paid by and who really owns this country.

It may seem radical, but as the man said, "I'm madder than hell, and I'm not taking any more."

New party is open to criticism

ment's proposed Free Trade deal with the United States, not on principle but because they feel the timing of the agreement is too premature. "We have to straighten out the mess our economy is in first." If implemented, Dobbins says the trade agreement would pose a threat to Canadian national security by allowing terrorists and foreign espionage agents freer access across the borders.

Dobbins says right now the world economy is being controlled by certain international economic cartels like the International Monetary Fund and grain and oil marketing boards. He says there is no reason for there to be food riots in Soviet bloc countries or starvation in Africa when there are farms in Canada and the United States being shut down. This year will be the first year in history that the world will produce less food than it takes to feed it because the international cartels are dictating economic policy to governments. Farmers are being told what to produce, how much to produce and at what price to sell it at, all to keep prices inflated, he says.

The party's beliefs are not widely held, admits Dobbins, and this opens candidates up to criticism.

"Calling us traitors or trouble-makers doesn't change the facts," says Dobbins. "People will always take shots at someone who bucks the system. The most convenient way to remove issues is to attack and ridicule them."

Dobbins hopes to bring his message to Victoria-Haliburton by convincing people that what's good for the country is good for the two counties. A strong economy means people have more money to spend in tourist and recreation areas. Dobbins want people to be aware of what's going on outside of Ontario.

"the whole country is in trouble."

In the 1984 federal election the Party for the Commonwealth of Canada had candidates in 68 ridings. Dobbins says they are hoping for more than 100 this time. The exact number won't be known until after October 21, the deadline for candidates to declare their intention to run. It is after that date that the Party will choose their party leader. Although they can't reasonably expect to form a government or opposition, Dobbins hopes to see enough support to influence government policy.

BOE race is tight

by JAY KERR-WILSON
Staff Reporter

There will be a race for available seats on the Haliburton County Board of Education, in the two largest townships.

Both Dysart et al and Anson, Hindon and Minden have had the number of trustees representing their respective townships altered.

Minden has gained a trustee and will have three instead of the current two, and Dysart has lost a trustee falling from five to four.

There was some concern of a possible lack of interest in Minden but with five people contesting the three seats, these fears have been laid to rest. Running for the Minden positions are incumbents Wendy Ladurantaye and John Cooper, and challengers Mary Anne Wilson, Wayne Cox and Wally Bunn.

Only time can change parents — not their children

by MARTHA PERKINS

Staff Reporter

UNLIKE GRANDPARENTS, who have always seemed "old", parents age right before their children's eyes. The first sign might be wrinkles, or grey hairs or a loss of hearing. However it starts though, the process doesn't stop and sooner or later, children must come to accept their parents' aging.

"We resist change and we don't like the changes we see in our parents," Peterborough social worker Wayne Casey told a small audience Thursday night at St. George's Church. "We have a tendency to try to change our parents."

Casey is part of the Peterborough Civic Hospital's team for Psychiatric Assessment Service for the Elderly, which also includes a nurse, occupational therapist, physician, psychiatrist, and psychologist. The team sees the aging person as part of a whole, and in assessing how age is affecting them, they also look at how the family reacts to and deals with those changes. He was invited to Haliburton on behalf of Home Support Services and the Social Action Committee.

"How many of you are married," Casey asked the handful of people. "Did you hope you might change your spouse (when you married?) Did it work? What happened when you tried?" The answer to the latter question was "resistance."

The expectation is common, says Casey, even though it is not realistic. With spouses, we think "they should be the way we would like them to be. As adult children, we can often fall into that trap with our parents."

One year, Casey was attending a conference which needed some volunteers to act as role players. At the time, he was having problems with his aging mother, and his feelings became apparent as the skit continued. Finally, the instructor stopped him and said "You're trying to change your mother. As long as you try to do that, you're going to fail."

If you try to change a parent, what will likely occur is that they will "dig in their heels" and refuse to do anything of the sort.

Then Casey asked everyone what it was about their parents that made them seem so special when they were growing up. "They really cared, they'd listen to you." "They'd encourage you—they always tried to give you the things they wanted." "They're supportive."

Now that the children are adults with children of their own, what do their parents do which still makes them seem special? "She still tries to help." "It's the unconditional thing. I live a life they don't condone but they're past the point (of telling me what to do) and are very supportive."

Did aging parents do anything to put a strain on those good relationships? "My dad started to wander and he didn't like it when I found him. He didn't understand that I was looking for him because I cared. They don't realize they are lost."

Another woman's mother is 86 and still insists on getting wood from the pile every morning. "She should have given the woodstove up long ago. She's too old, yet she's always done it. But you do worry about her. You have different ideas of what's safe."

As children dealing with aging parents, adults have to 'look beyond the present situation and see the entire relationship... We have a tendency to try and change our parents.' When this happens, the parent is more likely to 'dig in their heels' and refuse any help at all. But at the same time, children must remember that 'if the caregiver's needs suffer, you can feel emotionally and physically ill.' Then no one benefits

Wayne Casey answers questions after his presentation

That independence which once seemed such an endearing quality now is shown to have its bad sides.

Casey said that all too often "we get caught up with dealing with those negatives. Our relationships can be very positive and to a large extent they can stay that way. "There are some positive memories and experiences" which can over-ride any of the bad.

He can remember the first time he noticed that both his mother and his grandmother had wrinkles. All of a sudden, "I thought they were old and I was going to lose them." That grandmother lived for another 30 years.

His father first realized he was old one day when a new neighbour's dogs tried to attack him when he returned home from a winter in Florida. The other neighbour, whom Mr. Casey Senior had always viewed as a friend, came running out, shouting that the dogs were attacking "the old man." To Mr. Casey the neighbour was a friend just like all others; to the neighbour, Mr. Casey was a friend, but an old one.

But what do you do when your parents don't seem to accept the fact that they're aging, one woman asked. Her mother was reacting to challenges the same way the woman's young children were. "When will she grow up," she asks laughingly. "All of a sudden their actions are very inappropriate—just like children's."

Parents have always been strong and independent to us, and when they age, those traits can take on good or bad characteristics. Should aging parents still feed a woodstove, or try to parasail? Yet do we want them to grow dependent on us, just when we've lost the dependence of our own children?

A year ago, Mr. Casey's grandmother came to live with him, his wife and their two children. She's 83 years old "and has really enriched our lives." She never gets angry, will help prepare dinner, is generous with her time and love, and is good for the children, aged 16 and 14. There have been some really special memories which make the situation rewarding.

Yet there is also a downside. Previously, when Casey was only making visits to his grandmother's house, he was the apple of her eye, the grandson who could do no wrong. On his part, he would patiently listen to her stories and make her feel so special.

Now that she is living with the Caseys, she's seen him yell at the kids, scold the dog and come home in a bad mood. Normally he appreciates her help in the kitchen, yet what about the times when "I want to be left alone?" With little enough time to entertain their own friends, there are now the commitments to entertain friends of his grandmother's. He also spends less time listening to her stories, even though he knows that reminiscing is an important part of someone's mental health.

No one teaches us how to deal with parents, or grandparents, who are aging; it's something you have to learn along the way and each relationship is unique. Changes can either be chronic, such as being incontinent, forgetful, repetitive, or episodic, such as depression, bad moods or falling. One woman nearly went crazy with her husband's continually asking what time it was. To outsiders it was a nuisance; to her it was something she had to live with all the time. "Something that is very small can wear you down and create a lot of stress with caregivers."

Family life is not going to go on an even keel, Casey reminded his audience. There will be ups and downs which have to be weathered as best as possible. Sometimes one grief will be compounded by another and it will seem one will never get out of the valley. It is during these times in particular that the caregivers, the children, should not lose sight of their own needs as well.

Guilt is an especially negative emotion. "Sometimes we feel we should be able to pay back (all the things our parents did for us when we were children.) It's not that we shouldn't be good to them, but we can't give them as much as they gave us."

"Sometimes we move too quickly. We see a problem and jump to do something about it. Our parents won't necessarily be receptive. They can wait too long to ask for help or we can get drawn into (their problems) so we don't have lives of our own. Often the elderly person is not doing too badly, but the family is burnt out. If the caregiver's needs suffer, you can feel emotionally and physically ill."

Perhaps what is most important is to "look beyond the present situation and see the entire relationship." The present might include a parent who doesn't want to move into a nursing home or is suffering from dementia. But instead of focusing on the negative, or the reality of a person in transition, one must think back on all those things which made parents seem so special right from the beginning.

GUILD NOTES

by Elene J. Freer

ON OCTOBER 21, two new exhibitions open at the Rails' End Gallery: The Firekeeper's Garden: Touch Me and The Essence is Water.

The Firekeeper's Garden: Touch Me is an exhibition of sculptures by artist Paul Ives, a self-taught carver living in Bancroft. In the late 1960s, Paul began to carve a series of pipes with bone inlay known as Moonstone pipes. This series of pipes was sold throughout Ontario and the United States. By the late 1970s, Paul had turned to chainsaw carving, eventually experimenting with the chisel and mallet. The works included in this exhibit are from an on-going series of wood sculptures based on the image of the Ontario salamander.

The Firekeeper's Garden: Touch Me will be used as one means to integrate into the Gallery those members of extended community who have special needs. This touchable exhibit will offer people with impaired sight an opportunity to fully explore art in an atmosphere designed to accommodate their needs.

A reception will be held for Paul Ives, creator of the Firekeeper's Garden, on Saturday, October 22, between 7 and 9 p.m. at the Rails' End Gallery.

Everyone is welcome to come and meet the artist or to browse through his Garden.

The Essence is Water consists of the jewellery crafted by Jude Ortiz. The fine arts have long been considered as vehicles for social commentary while the making of jewellery, for obvious reasons, has been associated with body adornment. But, with the on-going process of creative exploration and experimentation, there exists, among some jewellers, a move to break away from the traditional shapes and forms and to incorporate a diverse range of non-precious materials. Such jewellery reaches beyond its decorative qualities and enters into the realms of intellectual ideas and social commentary. Jude manipulates her jewellery to voice her concerns about water as a non-renewable resource.

Both exhibitions run until November 19, 1988. The Guild's concert Series will present Philip Thomson, pianist, on Monday, October 24. Thomson, touring under the auspices of Youth and Music Canada, is becoming increasingly acclaimed as one of the foremost interpreters of 19th century composer/pianists, such as Liszt, Rachmaninoff, and Chopin. Thomson has many awards, international engagements and encouraging performance reviews to his credit. His recital is the first in a series of five equally impressive performances scheduled by the Concert Series for the 1988/89 season. Tickets are available at the Rails' End Gallery for the low price of $30. All concerts are held at the Haliburton Highlands Secondary School's auditorium at 8 p.m.

John Eakins announces new school program

DRINKING AND DRIVING don't mix! This is the message that our government wants to stress to Ontario's drivers and passengers. I am pleased to say that your provincial government will provide $600,000 over the next two years to community groups and high school student organizations fighting against drinking and driving.

The work of community organizations and student groups is vital to the success of Ontario's fight to reduce drinking and driving. These groups have demonstrated that they know how to reach out to their communities and schools with effective programs. Their work has prevented the loss of many lives and saved the taxpayer millions of dollars. The creation of this grant program underscores the fact that the Government of Ontario is committed to using resources in our communities to help change public attitudes about drinking and driving. The fund was created to support community efforts now underway, to provide seed money to those wishing to start a group, and to create new activities and events that will focus public attention on the impaired driving issue. Individual high school groups may apply for grants of up to $1,000 to support plans scheduled for the 1988-89 school year.

Those interested in applying for funding are invited to contact the Drinking/Driving Countermeasures Office at (416) 965-7145 in order to obtain applications for funding. Completed applications for the program must be received no later than October 31, 1988.

PEOPLE

Cottagers hope their game wins Christmas sweepstake

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

IT WAS ALL those rainy days at the cottage on Eagle Lake which made their children love playing board games, the parents of the inventors of Canada's newest board game believe.

Almost three years ago, Shirley and Gerry Fewster's son Blair woke up in the middle of the night and scrambled to write down the words "Sports Franchise." He was working with autistic children in Bracebridge, wondering what business he and his wife could start, when the answer came invest in an unproven board game was considered too high a risk."

However, the plan to do everything independently fell through with the imminent arrival of Fewster-Yan's daughter Jennifer. Because she and her associate Ivana Fabrizi did not have the time to market and promote the game themselves, they approached two major toy companies.

Irwin Toys of Canada liked the idea and signed a three-year contract to produce and market the game, while the Fewster family and shareholders retain ownership of it. On Saturday, Mr. and Mrs. Fewster dropped into the Echo office with a copy of the game, released just a few days earlier.

'The family's love of games started at Eagle Lake,' say the Fewsters, who want everyone to love Sports Franchise to him like this—he would invent a board game called Sports Franchise.

After working on the idea when he was a little more wide awake, Fewster told his sister Jill about it. She was a recent Masters of Business Administration graduate and had always told her brother they would work well as a business team if only they knew what kind of business to get into. Another brother, Brian, who is the manager at Sir Sam's Inn, also liked the idea and became a shareholder, along with Bob and J.D. Bishop and some other friends.

The game developed over the next year, as dozens of friends were asked to play and give their comments and criticisms. The game was officially launched at McKeck's Place in Haliburton last summer. When the game had a concrete form, Jill Fewster-Yan started taking it to businesses which might be interested in sponsoring the game in return for a stadium on the board to be named after them. "Although they were interested, no one wanted to be the first to commit. Being the first company to

The game is designed to appeal to anyone who loves playing games, not just those who know a lot about sports, the Fewsters say. Mrs. Fewster avoided playing the game for a long time because she was the only non-sports enthusiast in the family. Now she can boast of winning a few times. (The game was explained in detail in a April 1 edition of The Echo.)

"The family's love of games started at Eagle Lake," where the family has either been renting or owning a cottage for 30 years, they say. Whenever the children had to stay inside, the board games came out and the fun they generated meant "they loved rainy days."

Expectations are high for Sports Franchise, although dreams of a minor Trivial Pursuit do not run through everyone's minds. But as long as there are rainy days, there are people who like to play board games, and the Fewsters are hoping the one people reach for has the words Sports Franchise written on the box.

When Gerry and Shirley Fewster visit their cottage on Eagle Lake, part of their visit includes promoting the new board game their children have invented. While the idea for Sports Franchise was not born in Haliburton, but in nearby Bracebridge, the Fewsters say their children grew to love games during their stays at the cottage.

Homemakers feel like one of family

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

There are times when you know your work is valued, says Lois Titus, a Red Cross Homemaker. "When you're told 'I don't know what I'd do without you,'" or when, after weeks of visits, you're still asked "Are you quite sure you'll be here next week," she knows her clients appreciate her help. At first, they might have been wary of a stranger in their home, but once that bond of trust and caring is established, "they don't want to do without you."

A Red Cross Homemaker goes into the homes of people who don't need to be in a hospital or nursing home, but who can't live an entirely independent life. These people may be elderly, just home from an operation, a young mother with a sick baby or who is sick herself, or someone of any age with a handicap. The Homemaker steps in to prepare meals, clean the house, do the grocery shopping, and in many cases, provide some much needed company.

"The Homemaker becomes their family if the Homemaker really cares," says Mrs. Titus, and her fellow Homemakers agree. They are gathered at the Legion, several days before Homemakers Week—it starts October 17—to talk about how they feel about their profession and what makes a job as a Homemaker special.

"I think you have to have a heart," says one, with another adding "It takes someone who cares. You

New U.C. minister arrives

KINMOUNT NEWS

by Millie Moss

Results of Kinmount Seniors Railroad Station Drop In Centre euchar games Thursday evening, October 6 were: ladies high, Lil Taylor; ladies low, Freida Boyce; mens high, Albert Crego; mens low, Gord Taylor; most lone hands, Peter Nykyforiak.

Congratulations to Mrs. Margaret Cameron of Fenelon Falls who was the winner of the beautiful hand made quilt when her ticket was drawn at the Railroad Drop In Centre euchar.

Violet Cooke of Irondale spent her day in Haliburton on Thursday, October 6.

Win Wilson phoned Betty and John Lonsdale in British Columbia Thursday evening, October 6 and we are all so sorry to hear of Ben's death. He was a true friend and part of her family for so many years. We know he will be sadly missed.

Ruby Schell, Margaret Kylie, Joan Hyams and Marion Scott went to St. Lukes Anglican Church for the Harvest Tea on Saturday, October 1 and later they went back to Margaret's house for dinner. Everyone enjoyed the day.

On Sunday, October 2, Keith Stata called for Ruby Schell and Joan Hyams, took them to his home and cooked dinner for them. The ladies enjoyed it very much and also the pleasant visit following.

Thanks to the Reverend Dawn Gilbey for the lovely birthday card and nice words.

Thanks also to Ida and Clyde Pardy of Pardy's Variety and Lotto Centre in Lindsay for their nice card.

Happy Birthday to Donna Stroud on October 17.

Welcome to Reverend Fred Clappison, the new minister of the United Churches of Cobocok, Norland and Kinmount.

Alice Rivers of Minden is a patient in Ross Memorial Hospital at this time. She suffered a fall which caused a badly broken ankle. She was operated on and for a while had to be placed in Intensive Care. Get well soon Alice.

Best wishes go out to Harold Alton of Cobocok. We hope he is back to good health soon.

Congratulations to Tammy Bryant of Norland who was the first winner of this season's Norland Volunteer Firefighter's Hockey Pool on Saturday, October 8.

Thanksgiving weekend was a very busy time for the Norland Volunteer Firefighters. They were called out to a cottage fire on Little Gull Lake and then spent all day and all night Sunday at another very bad fire at the dump on Deep Bay Road. The cottage burned to the ground. Thanksgiving, needless to say, was a quiet one at many of the firemen's homes. Thanks for another job well done boys!

Joan Hyams enjoyed having daughter Andrea and Scott Strachan from Don Mills over the holiday weekend.

Bill and Win Wilson of R.R. 1, Kinmount had Harold and Joan Mills, Mike Mills, Lisa Merola, Jennifer and Don Fraser, all of Pickering for the holiday.

At Joyce, Jack and Ernie Hills home, 13 family members showed up for the holiday.

Elizabeth Fryer cut her finger quite badly one day last week. I hope all is well by now.

Thanks to Dollie and Tracey LeCraw of Norland who made a lovely little floral table centerpiece for a recent event and were thoughtful enough to send one to me. Thanks also to Helen Graham and Beatrice McCaughey who helped with their donation of flowers.

Don't forget the turkey supper to be held at the Kinmount Legion Hall on Saturday, October 22 from 4:30pm to 7:00pm. Your genial hosts are Kinmount's own St. James Anglican Church Women. This event is one of the finer things to attend before winter sets in. See you there.

I hope Jessie and Everett Cameron are feeling much better soon. Included in those wishes are Charlie Henderson, Mary Pyke, Bill Moss Jr., Bob Hollobon and Joan Hyams.

Monday, October 10 guests at the Pyke home in Norland were Lou Lynne Liscombe of Toronto and Steve Childs from Sebright.

Kelly Graham was home with her parents for the holiday from Carleton College in Montreal.

Well folks, stay well and happy, read the Echo and give me a call at 488-2353.

Forest Ranger School's chef given many accolades upon retirement

DORSET NEWS

by Phyllis Briscoe

A taste of what is to come! When we see that white fluff floating around in the air, we more or less panic—get out the snow boots, mufflers and winter coats—but cheer up, Indian Summer is still to come and it won't dare to pass us by this year. So ignore the cold spell and anticipate a couple of weeks of warm weather, when you can do the last outdoor chores that didn't get done prior to winter.

The annual Muskoka Marathon was run on Thanksgiving Sunday and was better and bigger than the previous year, with 48 participants. One fourth of these were women. The winner was John Butler, whose time was 1:39:49. The first woman to cross the finish line was Joanne Fisher, whose time was two hours. Barry Ault of Huntsville was first with a time of 1:40:24. Jennifer Wood won the first Women's Masters and Shawn Joint won the junior class. This race is organized by John Clayton, Paul Kennedy and Patsy Bradbury. It entails a great deal of hard work and many local people get involved, manning water stations which is a cold job as I can attest to; distributing tables, water buckets and chairs as well as many other chores. The organizers are very appreciative of these volunteers. Contributing awards and monetary assistance include Claytons and Robinsons general stores, the Dorset Lions Club, Muskoka Tourism and Metropolitan Insurance. This is a beautiful time of year for a run on partly country roads and runners come from various parts of the Province to take part. It is a credit to the people who work so hard to make it a success. Another plus for Muskoka ingenuity.

We have a super collection in our midst.

Ruth Ross, who lives at Paint Lake has been a representative for Tupperware products for the past 18 months, and was the highest sales manager for the Central Atlantic region for the month of July. Congratulations Ruth!

A dinner party was held at the Frost Centre to honor Truman Wright, who retired as Chef after serving for over 21 years in the food department of the Forest Ranger School, then the Frost Centre which F.R.S. evolved into. Truman and his wife, Eunice, received many lovely gifts and there were many accolades handed to Truman from ex-employees and associates. Many retired employees of the establishment were present to honor Truman and to wish he and Eunice happiness in the future. Sid McGowan of Parry Sound was one of the out-of-town visitors for the occasion.

Visitors at the McEachern families at Paint Lake were Carolyn

Stuart, a cousin and Millie's sister, Helen White and her husband Charles. These folks are all from Nanaimo, B.C.

H.H. if you have back troubles, use a sponge mop for cleaning the bathtub. It is easy to the sides and bottom and the tiles may also be cleaned in this manner.

The Dorset Senior Club will be meeting at 1:30 in the afternoon instead of in the evening after November 1, 1988. There is a film being shown this evening.

Jack Frost has been nipping at everything he could get at, as he usually does about this time of year, but we should still have some nice sunny weather between now and Christmas.

The beautiful Canada geese have been honking their way south in formation for some time, wise birds. There used to be an expression "silly as a goose" but I think they are pretty smart.

Grade 1 students search for cookies

by MARTHA PERKINS
Staff Reporter

She is wearing a grey wig and gloves. Last week, she walked into Victoria Street School where the Grade 1 classes were making pumpkin cookies. Despite some children's concerns that you're not allowed to accept things from strangers, she was allowed to give them a magic powder to make their cookies taste better. Thinking that their cookies were safely cooking in the oven, the children went outside for recess.

When they returned, the strange woman was gone. So were the cookies. All they found near the oven was a tape-recorded message from this mean lady, who now told them that her magic powder makes cookies disappear. What will the Grade 1's do? (And, the teacher thought, is there any Ben Johnson lesson to be learned afterwards about taking supposedly magic powder—even if you say you don't know what it is?)

First of all, they had to figure out who this cookie snatcher was. Hadn't they just read a Roald Dahl book in which he describes what witches look like? Let's see. A witch has to wear a wig because she's bald—that's why she keeps scratching her head. The gloves are worn so people can't see that she has no fingernails. What's worse is that she was born with no toes. And if you really want to have nightmares, you should be around when she spits—it's blue. Yuck.

The Grade 1's needed no further convincing. Witches weren't real, but this woman was a witch whose magic powder had made their cookies disappear. Rumbling stomachs could be heard throughout the school.

However, there were clues they could follow. In a walk through the playground, they found pieces of paper with the words "Help Wanted" and "News" on them. Then when they were doing a red puzzle, the pieces formed the word "Advertisement." Where is it that people see advertisements for help wanted and the news? The newspaper!

Not to be outdone by any witch, these intrepid sleuths took to the streets, their first destination The Echo. Creating quite a stir by their en-masse presence, the children announced they would like to put an ad in the paper to see if anyone would help them find their cookies. Perhaps, when the paper came out on Wednesday, they would also find a message from the witch, since everyone likes to put messages in the Classifieds.

And what are you going to do with the cookies when you find them, they're asked after a tour of the office. "EAT THEM!!!"

Now it just so happens that part of the Grade 1 curriculum is to learn about the places in their community. In their search for their cookies, couldn't they enlist the help of downtown businessmen, and at the same time, learn a little bit about their jobs? The idea seemed too good to be true and for an entire morning, the classes tramped along, holding their partner's hand, and asking questions up and down the main street. It was an exhaustive search to no avail—still no sign of the witch or the cookies.

Perhaps today's Grade 1 students should ask the Grade 2 students what they did last year when their gingerbread couple walked out of the oven, saying it was too hot and they wanted to see a little bit of the world. Shortly after they were found in the library a week later, all that was left of those gingerbread was a few crumbs on the floor.

If you have any information about the witch, shown in the accompanying picture or have smelled some pumpkin cookies hiding about, please phone Victoria Street School. The four Grade 1 classes would appreciate any help they can get—they might even give you a cookie as a reward.

Have you seen this woman?

This woman was last seen at Victoria Street School, where she gave the Grade 1 students some magic powder which made their pumpkin cookies disappear. The students can't prove this, but they think she might be a witch, so watch out. If you do see her, try to take off her shoes—witches have no toes. Or you could try slipping off her gloves—witches have no fingernails. If your stomach is strong, see if she has blue spit—a sure sign that proves she's not just a nice old lady.

Brownies fly up into Guide pack

WILBERFORCE NEWS

by Marian Donovan

On Wednesday, October 5 at the Lloyd Watson Centre, the Wilberforce Guides, Brownies and Tweenies held a "Fly Up" ceremony for Brownies who had earned their wings to become Guides. Decorated colourfully in the fall theme, simulated olympic torches were used to represent the flame of the spirit of guiding. The flame was then returned to the tweenies, that the spirit will be perpetuated. Earning their Wings were Lisa Finlay, Tracy Nottage and Megan Agnew. Brandy Woodcox also flew up with a feather, as she has to complete her badges. The new tweenies are Melissa Olszewski, Lee-ann Tighe and Sandra Dunford. There will be a fly up ceremony for these girls to Brownies later in the year.

For the second year, in what will become an annual event, Bob Parks of the Wilberforce I.G.A. is holding a Halloween Party at the Lloyd Watson Centre. The date is October 22 from 7pm to 9pm. Prizes for best costume and best dressed child accompanied by an adult will be awarded. Games, hot dogs and drinks are available for all children up to age 13. The community thanks Bob, his family and staff for what we hope will become a tradition in Wilberforce.

Earning the highest score at the Monday Euchre at Highland Grove were David Lawrence and Stella Rapson; most lone hands to Irma Dunford and Sulo Soper; low score to Evelyn Bowen and Irwin Bowen; and the travellers. Please turn to page 20

Colours are lovely at Dorset tower

SENIOR LEAGUE

by Pearl Lyle

Hi Readers: The weather is beautiful before winter comes along. Doris took us for a drive to Dorset and the lookout tower last Friday. It was a lovely day and the colours were really nice.

Our tea party Thursday afternoon was by the ladies from Haven of Rest. We really enjoyed the food and the sing-along after. The singsong was led by Olga and Grace Colburn. The friendship was much appreciated. We hope they will favour us again. Thank you ladies.

Angus Coulter had a visit with his son Glen and daughter from Ottawa and yesterday his daughter Margaret Miller came to visit him. Jean Taylor spent Monday with her niece and family. I had Thanksgiving dinner in Haliburton with the granddaughter and family, Roger and Debbie Dart, Devon and Lauren. Turkey dinner was held for the residents on October 11 at Hyland Crest. Maron Rose was out for dinner with her son yesterday and Mrs. Casey was out for lunch on Tuesday with her daughter Jean. Mr. Morley is spending the weekend with his family in Toronto. Winnie Barnum has gone for a two-week trip to British Columbia.

I am sorry to report Violet Thomett is in the hospital, do hope it won't be long before she is home again. I am glad to say Nancy Carefoot is coming along nicely after surgery in St. Michael's Hospital in Toronto. We wish her a speedy recovery, and hope she will be home soon.

October birthdays at Hyland Crest are Bob Mitchell, Lucy Burgess, Tryphine Jenkins, Lula Ferrill and Etta Brentnell.

Winners of the turkey draw were: Linda English, Ruth Griffin, Isabel Keefer and Debbie Dart.

A little thing is a little thing, "but faithfulness in little things is a very great thing." Now, that's worth remembering.

Janet Joyce Brown, youngest daughter of Walter and Marjorie Brown of Lochlin, and Lloyd Ernest Swanton, son of Edward Swanton of Kinmount, were married August 28 at Galway Hall and Community Centre. Matron of honour was Tracey Henderson of Minden. Bridesmaids were Teresa Brown of Lochlin and Shawna Monahan of White Horse, Yukon. Best man was Stanley Brown of Lochlin. Ushers were Mike Viney and Dave Anstey of Kinmount. Following the ceremony a supper and dance were held at the Galway Hall. The couple are residing near Kinmount.

Phone solicitation warning

INFORMATION CENTRE NEWS

by Doreen Hawman

As a result of entering a contest at the National Home Show, a local resident received a call from a U.S. based firm informing him he had won a trip to the Bahamas. The information centre made an inquiry to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations on behalf of the individual and the following news release was forwarded to the centre by return mail.

Visitors to the recent National Home Show at Exhibition Place should be cautious about a possible follow-up telephone solicitation from one of the exhibitors for a U.S. based shopping club membership and an inexpensive vacation, according to the Ontario Consumer Ministry.

Several consumers have complained to the ministry that a win-a-trip contest coupon they completed at the home show results in a telephone call from the United States informing them that they had not won the free trip but had qualified for membership in a home shopping club and a discount trip to either Florida or Mexico. All the consumer has to do is pay $299.00 and supply the caller with their credit card number.

"The Ministry has some concerns about this promotion," said Consumer Services Bureau advisor Randy Reese. "First, consumers are strongly advised never to give their credit card numbers out to sales people or any other unsolicited callers. This is particularly true when dealing with out-of-country callers since there would be no protection under provincial or federal law should there be a problem." Reese also advises consumers to consider whether the offer is actually as good a deal as it sounds.

Reasonable package vacations to Florida or Mexico are available through Ontario registered travel agents. Trips arranged through these agencies are protected by the Ontario Travel Industry Act and payments may be refundable through the Travel Industry Compensation Fund should the trip not take place. Bookings with out-of-province firms have no such protection. In addition, when you arrange a trip yourself, the date and location is your choice, not someone else's," said Reese.

Membership in a American home shopping club can also lead to problems. Currency exchange, postage and handling costs, and manufacturer's warranties that are not honored in Ontario are only some of the difficulties you could encounter. And, if you don't receive the goods ordered or they arrive damaged, there is no recourse for complaints in this country.

"Don't let a good sales pitch convince you to join a club or take a trip that you haven't thoroughly researched and planned. Remember, if the offer sounds too good to be true, it probably is," said Reese.

If you require help completing an application or have a question that needs answering, contact your nearest Information Centre. In Haliburton the centre, located in the Drag River

Municipal Bldg., Maple Avenue, is open Mon.-Fri., 10:00 am to 4:00 pm or call 457-2733. For the residents of the Minden area, the centre is situated in the Municipal Bldg., Milne Street, and is open every Tuesday from 10:00 am to 4:00 pm or call 286-4100.

Seniors host farewell party

Competition was stiff and the scores close at the Tuesday Night Bridge at Tory Hill. Coming out on top was Vic Mathews of Wilberforce. Second place went to Queenie Taylor of Gooderham and third prize to Marj Sillars of Cardiff. The consolation went to Clare Seeley, also of Cardiff.

The Monmouth Senior Citizens Club presented a "going away" gift to Dorothea and Dave de La Harpe, who are moving to a new home. Both will be missed as they have been active in many of the Senior's events and their hard work will be missed. The club will welcome any new members, so come out to the Lloyd Watson Centre on a Tuesday afternoon.

The Harcourt and District Art Club will begin on Monday, October 24 and Tuesday, October 25 at the Harcourt Community Centre. Experts or beginners are invited to just come out and do your thing in the relaxed atmosphere of people who just like to draw or paint.

DORSET NEWS

week is being celebrated at the Haliburton County Public Library of which the Dorset Library is a branch. The week extends from October 17-23. On Monday, October 17 at 11am the Dorset Public Library will be hosting a special library program entitled "Kid's Kapers". Karen Collard will perform two plays "The Other Side of the Moon" and "The Treasure Hunt" for children 3 to 9 years of age. This will take place at the Library at the Dorset Public School.

Puppets of all kinds are the stock in trade of this exciting performance. As well as entertaining the children anyone with a love of puppets or just likes to see children enjoying themselves will be welcome at the performance.

There are many people in the vicinity that are "down" with the flu and it is a nasty bout. The chilly damp weather probably hasn't helped the situation unless you pick up a bug you aren't likely to succumb to the debilitating condition.

H.H. A teaspoon of baking soda and a 1/2 teaspoon of cream of tartar can be used in place of 1 teaspoon of baking powder. So if you are out of baking powder and have the other two ingredients you may continue with your recipe.

Their help appreciated throughout the county have to be a good listener."

"And a good visitor," joins in another woman. "They don't just want you to do their dishes."

"It's nice working in their homes," one says about the advantages of being a Homemaker. "They tell you little stories and you learn a lot about the history of Haliburton." Many of the Homemakers are new to the area (one woman said "I didn't even know there was a Haliburton when I moved here") and the oldtimers' stories give them an introduction to the people and places which make up a home.

But these friendships between client and Homemaker can also be painful. "You get attached to them (and the hardest part is) when they are dying and you know it and can't do anything." One woman says being a Homemaker is "almost like being a mother—you listen to their troubles."

Challenges abound in Homemaking, they all agree. There's the "odd cranky old man or the one who wants you to do eight hours work in three." What do you do when you go into a home and discover there's no running water or indoor plumbing? "You do the best with what you've got. That's all you can do."

A Homemaker's role is to "bring help instead of endeavouring to change lifestyles," says the county's co-ordinator, Ruby Way. "You have to be able to adjust and make them happy."

"I cut a man's hair yesterday and I've never cut hair before," says one Homemaker of how easy it is to make the client happy. "They like to be pampered," adds another. "You do their nails and makeup after years of them not being able to see to do it themselves and they're back to their old selves."

"If there is a need, these ladies see that the need is met. It's not often that we have to disappoint clients," Way says of the 34 women and one man who provide the service in the county.

One problem about Homemaking is its image as a glorified housekeeping service. Because the women rely on services they've developed in their own homes (there is also a training course), the wages have been kept low. Experience can bring wages up past the $6 an hour mark, but as one woman says, not many build up that experience because they find better paying jobs instead. "I think we've lost a lot of good homemakers."

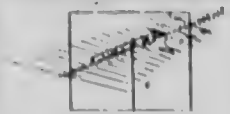

"It's not recognized as a profession and it is," says Way, who agrees with the lobbying that is going on to increase wages. Presently, when working through the Home Care program, she bills the Health Unit more than $9 an hour. But because that money is also expected to pay for mileage, administration costs and her salary, the Homemakers only see approximately two-thirds of that. She, and others in the Homemaking business, do not think that is fair.

While the women do wish they were better paid, they also recognize that there are some rewards of being a Homemaker that can't be measured by the dollar. It's those little things, like knowing that your help is both needed and appreciated.

The War Amputations of Canada

a tradition of amputees helping amputees

War Amps Chief Executive H. Clifford Chadderton and Champ Karl de Wit have something in common — they're both amputees. The War Amps was first established in 1918 to assist amputee veterans: Now the war amputees pass their many years of experience along to the younger generation through the Child Amputee (CHAMP) Program. Champs receive artificial limbs, counselling and financial assistance. What is our future? When there are no longer war amputees, we will become the Canadian Amputees Foundation. Graduates of our CHAMP Program will carry on The War Amps tradition of amputees helping amputees.

The War Amputations of Canada, National Headquarters, 2827 Riverside Drive, Ottawa, Ontario K1V 0C4.

The War Amputations of Canada is a registered charitable organization operated by amputees for amputees on a non-profit basis. The War Amps does not receive government funds.
